I WILL NOT FEAR

I will not fear,
Though storm clouds gather fast,
Though kingdoms fall and mountains crumble into dust.
When every ship comes home with broken mast,
And every doubt of earth and hell assails my trust,
Then, whether heaven above be dark or clear,
My anchor chain will hold.
I will not fear.

I will not fear,
When dearest friends turn back,
And earthly ties are snapped by unexpected strain;
When those once dear now follow in my track
And rend me, then, though bleeding, I will not complain.
I shall expect my Lord will then appear
To shield his trusting child—
I will not fear.

I will not fear,
When everything goes wrong;
When losses, crosses, pains, and sorrows overwhelm;
When days are dreary, nights are dark and long,
And storm blasts hide from view the Master at the helm.
I see him not, but while his voice I hear,
Unfalteringly I'll wait—
I will not fear.

Labor Unions and the Liquor Business

One of the most significant facts in the war against the saloon is the rapidly increasing antagonism of the labor unions of the world to the liquor traffic. "Down with the saloon!" is fast coming to be the slogan of the workingmen's movement in England; and when the license bill that would have closed 30,000 saloons was before Parliament, every member of the labor party voted for it and carried the lower house three to one in its favor. Had it not been for the House of Lords, the bill would have become a law. Russian of the unions are organizing against alcohol, and of particular, by active in Austria, and in America there is no doubt that certain plans to organize American laboring men against rum have filled the Bartenders' and Bootleggers' unions with alarm. In the open fight between the labor press of the country and the liquor interests, we find, in labor union papers, editorial as this addressed to the saloon-keepers of Washington who are selling non-union beer: "The brewers have already got their wealth, not only from you, but from the toil of these fellow workers and picket your place. Did it ever occur to you how you are being victimized by the brewers, how insolent they are in regard to your affairs, how little they care for your success or failure?"

The printed matter sent out by the liquor interests is being systematically turned down by most of the labor papers, and there is a remarkable tendency on the part of many independent papers to refuse the advertising of the liquor people. Evidently the labor unions are making a greater danger that threatens them from the laboring men's greatest foe, and when this awakening is complete the rum power's last rampart must fall.

America's Baby Week

The United States Department of Labor is sending out data, through its Children's Bureau, regarding the needs of American babies. It makes the year 1916 Baby Year, and says that the nation's responsibility for its babies will soon be understood as never before.

The first week in March has been designated as Baby Week throughout this country. During the seven days of that week the needs of the babies are to be so presented that all parents may learn, if they will, how to care for their children. More than 400 communities, representing every State in the Union, have already begun to lay plans for the work of that week, and it is expected that the remainder of the year will be marked by widespread efforts for the saving of babies' lives and for giving them a better chance to become healthy men and women.

The Children's Bureau sends out bulletins with practical suggestions for Baby Week campaigns adapted to the varying needs of different communities.

In a country where more than 300,000 babies die each year before they are twelve months old, and where hundreds of thousands who do grow up are weak and inefficient for life owing to neglect or improper care in infancy, it becomes the duty of the government to do all in its power to remedy matters.

Sons of Jacob Are Brothers Still

One of the most remarkable illustrations of the loyalty of Jews to their brethren scattered throughout all lands was seen recently at a meeting in Carnegie Hall, New York City, in which $1,000,000 was given for distressed Israel zone. Praying and shouting, men and women, rich and poor, stormed the great building to get an opportunity to give their trinkets, and jewelry, and checks, and bills, and pledges, for the sufferers of their Hebrew brothers beyond the seas. Rings, watches, necklaces, diamonds, were thrown upon the platform until several suit cases filled and placed in safe-deposit vaults, and it was near closing before all the gold and silver and copper and bills had been counted.

This, however, was only a beginning; for when the news went next morning, others responded with gifts, and the offices of a great banking house were overrun all day and extra clerks worked till long after business hours to take care of the funds thus brought in, and the sums paid in fulfillment of pledges given at the meeting. In the troughs were thinly clad men and women from the East Side, and others richly apparelled and coming in automobiles, all bringing gifts. Some with their mites, and others with full purses brought in thousands. Many who had not been in the habit of giving brought in rich gifts. Telephones were kept busy answering calls to send messengers to certain places for large checks, and one large business house suspended its other business to take care of the offerings. This manifestation of loyalty on the part of Hebrews to their brethren of the house of Israel reveals something of the loyalty of brotherhood which has throughout the centuries held them together in the faith of their fathers—a nation without a country, but a nation that in whatsoever circumstances placed, still longs to do its part in the fulfillment of God's promises to Abraham.

Loyal Citizens of America

In speaking of the loyalty of the Hebrews to their brethren and to the faith of their fathers, we are reminded of the fact that, as a people, they are true and loyal citizens of America. Whoever reads the writings of Hebrews in their current literature must be impressed with the spirit of loyalty. Nowhere can be found higher ideals of national life than in the Jewish Exponent, a weekly journal devoted to the interests of the Jewish people. Its writers often plead for higher considerations than material prosperity in those who would promote the welfare of the nation. It exalts the blessings of liberty and equality. It urges men to uphold the great traditions of America in the spirit of those who founded our government.

In an editorial at Thanksgiving time the Exponent expressed the belief that, when civil and religious liberty are guaranteed with their accompanying blessings, all else that is worth having is bound to follow. Here is one paragraph from that editorial which shows something of the pride taken by the Jewish leaders in the land of their adoption:

"Our beloved country is at peace with all the world. The dreadful war that is now devastating parts of Europe has touched our land only remotely. It has found us at peace with the other nations, with an excellent prospect that under wise and judicious leadership it will continue to the end. The harvest of grain and all the produce of field and forest have shown an almost unprecedented yield. The legitimate and normal type of industry is gradually restored to its former capacity. The nation has been spared any extraordinary domestic calamity and has been privileged to pursue its way free from serious manifestations of interference strife. All this constitutes an extraordinary record for a nation of one hundred millions of people, and furnishes the occasion for sincere and whole-hearted thanksgiving."

hope that a similar meeting can be held there next year.

Brother Burdick preached four sermons during the week, and conducted afternoons in informal discussion of problems that often confront our people, especially those concerning Sabbath reform.

On November 29 and 30, Rev. Edgar D. Van Horn, of New York, assisted in the work; and on December 1 and 2, Rev. Elio E. Sutton, of Shiloah, greatly aided the workers.

The church at Marlboro feels that the week's work held great educational value in impressing the people with Sabbath truth, and in teaching the importance of true Sabbath keeping. The work has been a help to the young people. The church has been made to realize more the vital importance of the Sabbath, and it is believed that many in the community will be led to a more thorough study of the Bible upon the Sabbath question. Brother Davis also feels that the Marlboro Church greatly appreciates the faithful efforts of its pastor, Rev. Jesse E. Hutchins, who is striving to strengthen the influence of the church so as to build up the kingdom of God in the community.

The Threefold Temptation of Christ

REV. IRA S. GOFF

Serenity delivered at the Eastern Association, Albany, R. I.

Soon after the threefold baptism Christ was led of the Spirit into the wilderness; or, as the evangelist Mark puts it, he was driven of the Spirit. I do not believe Christ was driven as the wind would drive a weather-vane, but he would be driven into the wilderness by the Spirit to the wilderness. Those Jordan waters were a sort of inauguration for his mission, leading up to the different courts of his ministry, and to his sacrifice. His baptism of the Spirit was his anointing for the ministry, and endowment of power for his mission; for I believe the Scripture bears me out in the thought that his childhood, his youth and young manhood had been passed in much the same way as the corresponding periods in other lives. He was the son of Joseph and Mary, was brought up in the town of Nazareth, worked as a carpenter, and grew in stature, wisdom, and knowledge as the years went on.

The whole of the temptation was directed to divert his life into unlawful channels; and as we find no thought of the higher mission in his youth life, we must suppose that the knowledge of his divine mission had just been given. We read that Jesus was filled with the power of the Holy Spirit. This expression marks the highest elevation of life, the entire subordination of the human spirit to the divine. When for a week, and at one and the same time, we have had moments when, in the words of Paul, we have been lifted up, and have heard words unspeakable. I mean, dear friends, to say this; when at our very best we have been where we could, as it were, touch the hem of His garment; but our experiences at their very best are similar in part only to that of the Master. What must have been Christ’s experience at the Jordan! How much the opened heavens must have meant to him! How he must have been thrilled when the divine voice declared, “Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased,” just at that moment he was carried away into the Spirit into the wilderness.

And a wilderness indeed it was; some deep and fertile country, covered with a thick dense forest, inhabited by wild beasts, trodden by the foot of man. We are told that he was here tempted of the devil for forty days, and that in all these days he did eat nothing. Perhaps he was so much taken up with his heavenly vision, the new experience that had come to him, the growing consciousness that he was the Son of God, that he had a mission to all men—to all the spiritually that he neglected the physical life. The spirit and the flesh are so closely connected that, let the flesh prevail, and life is lost. Let the spiritual take the place of the tender, let the spirit be placed under restraint, let it be taught its subordinate position in life, and there be a general trend upward toward heaven and God. But Satan always seeks to reverse the divine order of things; thus he sought to lead the Master astray.

The fast was closely connected with the temptation; indeed it was a preparation for it. If Jesus was man as man, it must be at his weakest point, the temptation must be at its hardest. An athlete tones up his body to its very best, in order that he may gain. But Jesus with the fasting had reduced his body to a condition, in which, humanly speaking, there was the least resistance. The adversary has every chance; he has his choice of time, place, and condition. Alone was the Master, hungry, and weak, when the Tempter came to him. I do not believe there is any form. If Jesus was tempted as we are, our experience will throw light upon his. There is no form to the evil that confronts us; the Tempter suggests some thought to our mind, some evil imagination, but he himself is masked, he is unseen. Just so we may suppose the Tempter came to Jesus. Recalling the announcement at baptism, “This is my beloved Son,” he took advantage of Christ’s hunger, and said; “You are hungry, you are exhausted, your strength is worn by the long fast; now, as you are God’s Son, turn these stones into bread. You have the divine power; you have authority over all things; make this power speak with your authority, make these stones bread.”

This was the suggestion made to the Master, and he would have responded. But weakness of the flesh had been allowed to act. Supposed Jesus had turned the stones into bread, would it have been any more charming than the birthing forth of the flesh from the soil, and the turning of the stones to tower? If he could use his power for the healing and feeding of others, why not for himself? At the first glance the thought seems reasonable. But if Jesus had done this, he would have been the Son of man, man in the sense of doing things like unto his brethren, tempted in all points as we are tempted. His life had always been nourished from pure human sources; man’s look had been so secret stream, but the breath of heaven works down to all, where any child of man could drink.

Satan encouraged him to break with nature. Then he would have ceased to be man; there would have been a gulf between him and the people whom he came to save. We might suggest, it was a temptation to distrust. “You, the Son of God, where are the marks of God’s love?” Weavers, when are the joys he bestowed upon you? He gives you a wilderness to wander in, solitude, privation. He who rained manna from heaven to Israel, who bade the cake for Elijah, has left you to do so yourselves. Why wait for help? You have waited too long; act now.” Thus the Tempter sought to throw the will of Christ out of gear with the divine will. Christ meets him with the Scripture; is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but in every word. Sometimes seem to think that the divine order of things has been changed, that material things are the things to be sought, that bread is the greater of life. We neglect the family altar, the reading of the Word, the church prayer meeting, and we are sometimes willing to miss the worship on Sabbath morning for a joy ride or to go visiting. The Master, in act and word, delivered the word of God to his elders; but at the Thanksgiving dinner immediately following the sermon, more than two hundred were served.

At the second temptation Christ finds himself upon the mountain. Suddenly, in a moment of time, the world lies at his feet. Here are fields of ripened grain. Here are vineyards of ripened vintage, here are fields of luscious fruits, and groves of olives in full. The sun is shining, there are rivers making their way through field, grove, hill, and plain. Over there lies Egypt with her fertile plains, her rich resources, her strongly fortified cities, her armies, and broad wealth. Over there lies the great country of Babylon, with her fertile plains and her wealth. Over there lies the great sea, decked with a thousand merchant ships laden with rich merchandise. Here are the military roads leading direct to Rome, and there is the throne of Caesar. Such was the splendid scene set before the mind of the Master. And the devil said, “All this is mine. But we are told the devil was a liar from the beginning; he is a pretender, a usurper. This good world belongs to God; it was created by him! he has given it to man to subdue, to beautify, to glorify, to make an Eden of, a place fit for men to dwell in.” But the devil said to the Master, “To whomsoever I will give it. Fall down and worship me, and all shall be thine. Now you are a king, but with out a throne. I know the way to royal power." He would reverse the divine order of things and persuade the Master to become the king of a nation, and not the kingdom of heaven.

We, too, are to become kings, princes, and prophets of God. Satan would divert the divine plan, and have us trust in material things rather than trust in God. The Tempter said, 'Ye have the devil's power; use it to gain a material kingdom. Work some wonder, perform some miracle; the multitudes will throng you. Then go to the chief priests and say, 'I will restore the kingdom, and it will stand forever.' They will then follow you, make you their king. Then you can de-throne Caesar.' This temptation was the chord of ambition Satan sought to strik— a chord whose vibrations are so powerful in the human heart, often crowding out other voices that are sweeter. Satan put before Jesus the highest possible material goal, and showed him its possibilities. His object was to divert the will of Jesus from the divine will. So he ever seeks to do with Christ's followers. He would set Jesus to gain the whole world instead of saving it. How many of the sons of men have been led away by a false less than the whole world; with a momentary pleasure, some glittering dust, some presence of the Holy God. No! It would have been freely quoted, had he sought to strike, as our Father; if he knew God, He would have been victorious. The Tempter departed. The Master turned the advantage of this against Satan, and said, 'Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.' He went away, bearing you up lest thou fall. You will give the multitudes abundant proof that you are the Son of God, that you are the Messiah.' Satan asks him to disobey, to set himself above the laws by which the world is governed. Thus he would force the natural laws out of order for a while. But such laws are God's laws; to ignore natural laws is presumption; it is not trusting God. The divine protection and guardianship are in- deed assured, protected, cherished in the garden of Eden. We are told that man was created in God's own likeness, the crowning feature of the creation; that when God looked over all things and pronounced them good, He made man his creation fit to be the companion of man, and that, in a special creation he made woman, that she should be a companion, a helpermeet for man; that they were placed in the garden of Eden to subdue, control, and beautify; that all things needful were placed in the garden. Now I think it would be fair to believe that Eve had often passed by the tree of forbidden fruit, that a creation fit to be the companion of man, and that the tree would remind her of God. But the time arrived when she came very near the forbidden thing. She lingered there, she gazed upon the fruit. For the first time the tree appeared to be beautiful and the fruit of value, and she said to herself, 'Why, I am deprived of something. That fruit is beautiful, it is of value. What is the use of going in this narrow way? Why not enjoy life? Why not eat of this fruit? It will do me no harm.' She ate of the fruit; her husband ate of the fruit; down went the soul of man. The story of Eden tells us that this was the story of every generation. I want you for a little while with me to forget the physical or material Eden, and to remember Eden means right relations with God; that God made man to walk in the way of our Master, when we come to the years of accountability, when we come to know right and wrong. If we choose the way of sin, we take ourselves out of that Edenic relation. God will and does prove that Good and Eva out of the garden in any physical sense. Through disobedience they isolated, and in time alienated, their lives from God. I want God's will not only to take them out of that holy relation with him; it was their own choice, their misuse of freedom. The forbidden fruit is that thing that gets between you and God, that questionable amusement. I want to say, dear friends, we are like God in our power of choosing, our knowledge of right and wrong. Shall we use this freedom of choice that we may serve our purposes, our desires, our own amusement, that we may drive ourselves out of the garden, out of fellowship with God. I know we claim the right to do many things; we go to the limit, reach out and tempt temptation, then we expect the Lord to keep us from sin, to keep us from failing. Thus in the realm of the physical life we are tempted, and fall.

In the second place, we are tempted, in the intellectual realm, with a desire for wealth, fame, honor, authority. I am thinking of the story of Balaam. We are told that, as the children of Israel were on their way to Canaan, they were victorious over their enemies, Balak, the king of Moab; feared they should be more powerful than he. We are told that he sent a company of men to Balaam, saying: 'Lodge here, and I will bring you word again, as the Lord shall speak unto me.' We are told that that Balaam came to the men on the morrow and said: "Up and away. I can not curse that people for this house full of gold; for they are God's people and should be blessed and not cursed. Now Balaam knew God's desire; he knew his duty; yet down in his heart he longed for the bribe, and I believe he had set his heart on the bribe, rather than on obedience to God. Balak, that shrewd king, knew something of the weaknesses of the heart of man; he knew something of the weaknesses of humanity. He was not satisfied with one refusal. He sent a second convoy of men, more honorable and honored, with greater gifts and with the promotion. They came to Balaam. Now Balaam knew God's will. He should have said: "I can not curse that people, they are God's people." Instead he said to the men: "Go aside, wait until morning, perhaps God will give me liberty to go." We are told the Lord came to Balaam that night and said to him: "If the men have come to call you, arise and go with them." We are told that God's anger was kindled because Balaam went.

It is like this, friend. We are free moral agents; we have the power of choice, a will to exercise. God will give us nothing more or less than the desire of our hearts; if, in the end, the knowledge of God's will, will seek to disobey him. It is a permission that belongs to free moral agents. It is this free moral agency that makes us what we are. The right of choice we would cease to be men. This free moral agency is given to us that we may aspire to all that is good and holy. What a shame that men use this freedom in the way of sin rather than in the service of God! Thus selves more and more like God! Do you know, every sin of the race comes as a misuse of glorified privileges that would help us to like our Creator? We should use all material things as stepping-stones, as vehicles, as angels to help us toward heaven and God. The material things should be placed in a subordinate position. But when we allow them to be the first, the essentials, they become a menace, and not a blessing. Thus we are tempted in the realm of the intellectual man, yield to the temptation, and fall.

In the third place, we are tempted in the spiritual realm—this is, presumption. We are told that God chose and anointed Saul to be king over Israel; that Saul realized his inability to serve people as their king; that in the beginning he was humble, and sought God's guidance; that after a degree of prosperity, his heart was lifted up, he became presumptuous, and disobeyed God; that the hand of God was withdrawn from him. I do not believe God in any physical way withdrew his hand, but through disobedience Saul took himself out of the relationships with God; through sin he isolated, he alienated himself from God. The lesson we should learn is, that sin always alienates us from God; that presumption is sin. We should seek to know God's laws, and seek to bring our will in subordination to the will of God. Man may be presumptuous in claiming the power to forgive the sins of the people, and claiming Holy Ghost power for the healing of others for a given sum of money. We may be presumptuous in claiming the power to talk with dead spirits, to read the writing of slates, to come handkerchiefs and garments, or to foretell the second coming of the Savior.

Across the river Zambesi, below the Victoria Falls, is a bridge which spans the widest chasm on any river in the world. That bridge was made by building out an arm from either shore, and uniting the two out-stretched arms in the center over the roaring stream. Neither arm could have reached the opposite bank by itself. At first one is inclined to say: "Surely the bridge of pardon be thrown over all the sin of the world; and that the standing of Christ is not in the flesh but in the Spirit, and that in the flesh he can not please God?" But pardon without penitence is impossible, and penitence without pardon is useless.—Rev. R. F. Horton.

Jesus gives the supreme example of unselfish progress. There is no indication throughout his entire earthly life of any slackening in his progress the upgrade. The character of Jesus is a continual development toward the best.
of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature, under "Pentecost," argue strenuously and clearly that this Sabbath in Leviticus 23: 11 could not have been the weekly Sabbath.

"Jesus rose (Matt. 28: 1) on the First day." The day of Christ's resurrection is a question for debate among scholars on both sides of this question. But assuming that he did rise from the dead on Sunday, his resurrection is never again referred to as connected in any way with that day of the week. If God had intended the first day of the week as a "memorial of finished redemption," a work assumed to be greater than the work of creation, it seems incredible that he should not have declared that Sabbath to be a "memorial of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ." But as we have already seen, the Sabbath was in no way a type of Christ, so that concerning Colossians 2: 17 would not apply. The Sabbath of the Decalogue was the shadow of but one thing "to come," namely, the heavenly rest (Heb. 4: 4-5). It did not in any sense prefigure Christ. It is very interesting, however, to notice what a fitting type it is of the "completed redemption," to be realized in the ecstatic states of which we may enjoy here.—when, on the Sabbath, we remember, as Israel was ex- horted to do (Deut. 5: 15), that we were once bondmen in the field of sin, and that Jesus delivered us by a mighty hand and an outstretched arm.

V. What you have to say under this last head I assume is not intended as an argument, and would not have been presented at all if you had known better those to whom you refer. I trust that a fuller understanding would keep you from saying, "Those who teach the keeping of the Sabbath put law for Grace, Moses for Christ, Works for Faith, Earth for Heaven, the Old Creation for the New Creation, a Dead Christ for the Living Christ." You will allow me to say a word or two, in conclusion, I am in many of my friends and my brethren, whom I feel you have misunderstood because you do not know them.

For there are no people who believe more deeply in the doctrine of justification and the reception of faith in prayer than is essential or valuable for me to hope to earn it. I accept it as God's gift to me. I will not insist his love by offering to pay for the free gift of his grace. But, having received the gift, I will, as Paul the Apostle in Philippians 2: 12, "work out" my salvation, that is, make the most of the gift in an active life of service, remembering that without him I can do nothing (John 15: 6; Phil. 2: 13). In doing this, there will be many a test of my love and loyalty, that may find expression in outward, and it may be formal acts of worship or as deeds of love and mercy. And I will not consider anything too hard that his love dictates to me. And should I find it a difficult and disagreeable thing to put aside the common affairs of life, to meet him for prayer, and have a better acquaintance (Ezek. 3: 20) with him on the day that he has specially blessed and set apart for that purpose? Would it not be in me to plead that some other day will better suit my convenience or notions of propriety?

Imagine a loyal son talking about being obliged to do what his father requires! No! "law and obligation" is not the language of free and loving sons and daughters, in the sense that they are compelling influences. The law is there and the obligation is real. We are not conscious of them any more than he is of the law of gravitation. Love is the compelling force now, fulfilling freely, spontaneously, 'from the heart' all the things his love imposes. "I am a mighty hand and an outstretched arm," and says, "Love is the fulfilling of the law," and then declares he is no longer under the law of his father, in the sense that he can now disregard what he wishes him to do. That talk would show that he has not passed from the dominion of law, into the higher kingdom where law is not absent, but where love is present.

Imagine a husband calculating how little he may do to be loyal to the marriage vows he has taken. Love in the beginning was the principle that made him gladly willing to take those vows. And an everlasting looking love makes the question not how little, but how much he is privileged to do, and never suggests that he is free from the fundamental vows, the few legal promises made at the marriage altar.

It is you for warning us of certain dangers. And it may be that some of these lessons are hard to hear, and that some of the passages cited as warnings ought to have closer study in the light of their historical setting. The brethren of the Galatian churches had been told by Judaizing teachers that they must observe the ceremonial as well as the moral law of Moses in order to be saved. And Paul is almost fierce in his denunciation of that heretical doctrine and of such teachers. He goes to the logical extreme in his efforts to dispose of the error, and free them from the heresy of salvation by works alone. No more, no less, does Paul mean when he says in the verse you quote (Gal. 5: 1), "For as many as are of the works of the law are under a curse." He who depends upon his own strength to work out his own salvation will find his strength failing at unexpected points. The law as expounded and interpreted by the spiritual meaning by the teaching of Jesus makes any attempt of an unrenewed man to keep it a hopeless task. Is not that what Paul meant when he said, "I was alive apart from the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." (Rom. 7: 9). He seems to say, "In my unenlightened state I considered myself equal to the task of working out my own salvation. I found myself able to keep the letter of the law. . . . as touching the righteousness which is in the law, I found blameless" (Phil. 3: 5-6). "But when the law came," (as illuminated by the teaching and spirit of Jesus), "sin revived," i.e., the consciousness of it. (I was hope- less to attain the standard, I was rejected and exalted, and I saw how great a transgressor I had been in my former life.) "And I died," i.e., my self-righteousness and self-sufficiency were gone. Of the same import are James 3: 19-20, 28, "to drive a man out of himself are entire dependence upon Jesus as the hope and ground of his salvation.

In answer to your last paragraph, in which you use Colossians 2: 14 as if it meant the Ten Commandments, let me ask you which of these precious ten words is contrary to us? Is there one, the obeying of which does not bring joy and blessing to the race of mankind? If you say the Sabbath is "against the commandments," then you in your explicit statement agree with the Scribes and Pharisees, who, in their narrow legislation, got the people to believing that the Sabbath was a burden instead of a blessing. But we are com- erred and corrected by the declaration of the Lord of the Sabbath, "The Sabbath was made for (not against) man." I hope I have not wearied you in what seems to me a rather tedious review of your reasons so admirable in their arrangement and brevity. The method which you have necessarily adopted in so compact a space, and my more elaborate exposition used in reviewing your reasons, are both alike inadequate for so large and important a theme. We are in danger of missing the truth when we study passages apart from their historical setting and textual connection. The truth of the Sabbath is written so large on the face of Jesus. He made it clear and luminous in his teachings. But to take isolated texts from Paul's writings about law is to work up his epistles into puzzling paradoxes. Get his point of view, the central thought of the epistle you are studying, and see how that what he writes is marshaled to enforce that teaching. As regards the particular doctrine you are studying, let us try to get the whole trend of Scriptural teaching. And I ask, would any one reading the Bible through from Genesis to Revelation, without extra-Biblical suggestions, receive an impression that Paul is more than the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath? And would this reading bring the conviction that Sunday should be observed to commemorate the resurrection or any other Christian fact or event?

Finally, "love is the fulfilling of the law." The first great command is love (Matt. 22:37-38); and the second commandment is love (Matt. 22:40). So we will be careful in our effort to tread the truth in our lives not to violate the "greater of these," as we study together to find the truth which harmonizes differences (1 John 5:3).

Believe me, dear friend, to have written all this in the spirit of this great law.

With every good wish for you in a complete obedience to Him we love,

Your Christian friend and brother,

A Letter to the Indiana Lone Sabbath Keepers.

Dear Coworkers:

It was not long after I had consented to become your secretary until I sought to spy out the land in order to ascertain what needs there was for a watch, but the own garden before turning one's attention to the gardens of others. By consulting our splendid new Directory I found I was deficient in that I did not belong to the home department of the Sabbath school of the church where I told my membership. Having made that right I am now free to turn my attention, in your direction. If you are connected with the Sabbath schools of the churches to which you belong, will you not enter at once? Perhaps this seems unimportant to you, but it is a part of the plan of our leader and it is useless to have a leader unless we pay heed to his plans.

We are not strong in Indiana and this is a case where we can not wish to increase our numbers unless by conversion—that is an object to be devoutly longed for. Our number—ten or a power vested within itself suggests the Tenth Legion. We are taking only four Recorders when there should be seven. The number for completeness. Can we not preserve the record of completeness along this line? Its importance must be apparent to all. The scattered members of a family maintain their interest in the old home and each other largely through the medium of letters. The Recorder is the weekly letter that keeps us posted regarding the aims; hopes, progress and needs of the denominational family; and moreover we need it for our own personal well-being. In the last few years we have given away and sold a goodly number of Recorders to people not of our faith. If the words of commendation spoken to the magazine as a whole were made known they would inspire the hearts of the editors and all who are interested in it with fresh courage. I shall send copies of the number containing this letter to the non-subscribers with the earnest plea that they either send me their subscriptions or forward them direct to the publishing house and notify me of the fact.

I want to conclude this letter by laying special stress upon the quiet hour. Its importance can not be overestimated. The forces of evil and the forces of this present age are set in deadly array against the welfare of our souls, and the dynamic power of our spiritual life rests largely in the quiet hour. It should be divided into the morning and evening needed to be taken. The morning watch can not be omitted without serious loss. Do I hear some one pleading, 'The pressure of duties prevents the morning watch?'—Oh! why the pressure of duties the greater the need of the morning watch, because it is a wonderful preparation for the strain of nerve-racking duties.

The manner of its observance is an important factor in the quiet hour. It is well for us that we can take every need and desire to God in prayer; even the little annoyances that fret and chase our spirits and the secret longings of our hearts which we could not reveal to the dearest human friend can all be breathed into our Father's ear and thus bring rest to our troubled spirit. The majority of Christians are proficient in pleading with God for blessings, but I fear we are prone to forget, that it is our high and blessed privilege to go to God seeking his presence.

An incident that happened in the home of the pastor of the Baptist church in this city soon after I came to La Porte, Ill, I think, made my meaning clear.

One morning the pastor was in a hurry to get into his study, but interruption followed interruption until his spirit became ruffled. When finally he was free, as he shut the study door behind him, he said, 'At last! I'm in my study.' He had been seated at his desk but a few moments when he heard his little boy pound on the door and ask to be let in. At first he paid no attention to the pleadings, hoping he would go away; but the child louder and louder came the knocks on the door until in sheer desperation he opened the door and said, "Not in the most amiable tones, "Well, what do you want?" I don't want mussin," replied the little fellow, "I just want to stay with you a little while."

Instantly the father caught the child up, pressed him to his heart, and told him he could stay with papa always if he wanted to. And so if in the seclusion of the quiet hour there comes into our souls a longing for the very presence of God so strong that all other cravings are forgotten while we plead for that boon only, we will feel the tender pulsations of our Father's heart beating in close sympathy with our own. May this be our blessed portion." Very sincerely yours.

MARTHA H. WARDNER.

State Document for Dry Side

Persons sophisticated in politics would hardly expect to find in an official document of the State of Pennsylvania a formal appeal in favor of prohibition, but somebody has dug up that very thing out of the last annual report of Henry Houck, who is the State of Pennsylvania's "secretary for internal affairs." Mr. Houck, of Coatesville, the steel town in the Brandywine valley, in his next, drawing his lessons from the year 1915, when Coatesville got along without saloons. He quotes authorities to show that during this "no-license" period of accidents in the steel mills fell off half, applications for charitable aid three-fourths, and cases of drunkenness four-fifths. "All business men reported trade vastly better in volume and in percentage of good credit, and the local savings banks received almost half a million dollars more in deposits than the year before."

Mr. Houck admits that when the saloons came back in 1914—let in by the weakness of a city judge and not at all by consent of the people they were not so bad as before, but he nevertheless maintains stoutly: "Enough was done in 1913 to demonstrate clearly that without saloons an industrial community is most benefited."

Maybe Pennsylvania's next legislature will read that report and decide to give the towns of the State a local option chance to part with their saloons out, and keep them out when experience has demonstrated that they will thus be most benefited. —The Continent.

We all so much enjoyed reading in the SABBATH RECORDER what our sisters in other societies were doing that the members of the Evangelical Society of the First Alfred Church decided to send to the editor of Woman's Work an account of some of the things that have been accomplished during the year by our society, thinking it might be of interest to others.

A regular session has been held each month. One parlor meeting on the evening of August 21, one public session November 25, and a regular meeting on February 22 have been extra sessions. Our regular meetings have been very interesting. Mrs.

T. D. Holmes, a returned missionary from China, planned several of the programs, when the subject of Medical Missions in Asia, South America, and China was presented. Also articles on "The Sorrows of Heathen Motherhood," "An Afternoon in a Chinese Hospital," and kindred subjects, and letters from missionaries were read.

One program consisted of a study of "The Life and Work of Fanny Crosby," and a number of her beautiful hymns were sung.

Another program was given by our older members, when letters were read from absent ones, some of whom were constituent members of the society. At the first session after Conference, some of the ladies who were privileged to attend and who had been previously appointed to do so, gave most interesting reports of Conference, after which questions were asked and a very helpful session enjoyed.

On the evening of February 22, Rev. G. Chapman Jones gave a lecture on "Japanese Curios." At the parlor meeting on the evening of August 21, Mrs. Elimina Titworth DeWitt, recently returned from Persia, read upon Persia which was followed by an open discussion of its condition in relation to the war—its people, their mode of life, their dress, etc. Mrs. DeWitt wore the Persian costume and showed us many curios, beautiful needlework, and various articles of Persian apparel. Following the program light refreshments were served.

On the evening of November 29 the annual Thanksgiving entertainment was held. The program consisted of—

The pageant consisted of thirty young ladies, who marched through the room, half of them dressed in white, carrying lighted candles, and singing. "Angels of Light." The other half dressed in dark foreign costumes and carrying unlighted candles. After marching in separate groups those dressed in white, representing Christianity, met the heathen girls and lighted their candles, after which they all marched out together, singing. "We have done very effective and emphasized the idea that had been presented in the play.

The Sunshine Committee is an important study in our society. Much of its work can not be mentioned, but some of the things it has done have been an apron sale on February 22, a picnic on the campus in July, and the annual sunshine party in the fish houses in September; quilts and comforts made and sold or given where needed; clothing collected and distributed in our own community, if needed, or sent to the New York Home for the Friendless; flowers sent to sick or bereaved ones;—in fact, its motto seems to be—

"Do all the good you can, To all the people you can, In all the ways you can."

As some measure of our thankfulness, we have added about $38 in our treasury from offerings received at Thanksgiving time. This, with the receipts from the Thanksgiving entertainment and from other sources, gives the feeling that we shall be able to meet some of the added demands upon us this year for denominational work. The Message of the Book of Daniel

Delivered on Sabbath Morning, October 30, 1915.

Plainfield, N. J.

Text, Psalm 45: 5-11. "Hope thou in God."

In selecting a Scripture text to go with this topic, The Message of the Book of Daniel, I have gone outside the book itself and chosen a sentence found in the Forty-second Psalm, in the fifth and in the eleventh verses, "Hope thou in God;" for from beginning to end, in story, in dream, in vision, in exhortation, direct and indirect, this purpose of the writer of the Book of Daniel is evident, a purpose to give courage, and loyalty, and perseverance, to those who are in hardship and who are cast down, because of an abiding, unchanging, confident hope in God.

I have hesitated for years about trying to give you the message of this wonderful book, the message which came to me over twenty years ago. I have hesitated because of the peril of being misunderstood.

The Book of Daniel has been, I think, to most people a mystery. They have been inspired and encouraged, of course, by the example of loyalty and fearless allegiance to right and to duty and to God, which are told in the book about Daniel and his companions,—their refusal to defile themselves with the court food and alcohol, their refusal to bow down to the images of the great king, their adherence to an open allegiance to Almghty God. But associated with the inspiration and encouragement from these examples of noble God-fearing and God-serving men there has been that vague, uncertain mystery of the visions and dreams, with their weird, strange imagery, which has in a measure counteracted the influence of encouragement. Such, at least, was my experience.

I know that many people, in many ages, have found in the visions of Daniel predictions of the course of history during the centuries since their time. There have been almost as many maps made of the future based on these visions, as there have been persons making the maps, and there have been almost as many time-tables of the course of history as there have been these visions as there have been persons making the time-tables. This was to me, and I think it has been to others, a matter of confusion, and most of us have simply let it pass, and have found our help and our source of devotion in other parts of the Bible. Many, however, have taken keen delight and found great satisfaction in seeking out of history fulfillments, and making other predictions for the future, as a rule for their immediate future, at whatever time they were living.

Now we all recognize in the Book of Daniel certain characteristics which are like certain characteristics in the Book of Revelation. And in the same way, Revelation is the story of most of us a puzzling book. These two books belong to a certain kind of literature, which flourished among the Jews in a period roughly outlined as extending from 200 years before the time of Christ, after the Exile, and after Christ. And a careful study of this literature, similar in style and general purpose, has thrown much light upon the books of Daniel and Revelation.
The Sabbath Recorder

Revelation. As a rule such books were the product of some great crisis in the history of the Jews, a time when there was oppression; and apostasy from God, when those who remained true to God were persecuted and in peril and trial. They were written to encourage the faithful, usually in the form of reciting incidents of the past, under the guise of prediction, where faithfulness had been rewarded, and where God had helped and led his people. Just as so many of the Psalms recite how the Lord led his people out from bondage, and how God led them in his presence, and brought them to the promised land.

In this kind of literature to which Daniel belongs, the method is often employed of putting images and the words into the mouth of some well-known hero of the olden times, and thus letting him tell the story. This is the plan adopted in the Book of Daniel. It was written in a time of great crisis among the Jews.

King Antiochus IV, usually called Antiochus Epiphanes, after campaigns in Egypt, was making war on Palestine, and in its cruel zeal he attacked and burned Jerusalem. He was compelling them to eat unclean food, and to worship idols, and he himself set up his profane altar in the very temple of God in Jerusalem, and offered there the desecrated food, making an abomination. How, then, must the true Jews, the worshipers of Jehovah, have been cast down and discouraged! Then it was that some inspired prophet produced the Book of Daniel. There was need for God's people to be true to his law. The book of the Maccabees, a part of what is called the Apocrypha, tells us that this king Antiochus Epiphanes was driven out of Jerusalem, and as a proof of apostasy to the Jewish religion, the eating of unclean food. How timely to tell the story of Daniel and his friends. How they, when tested by King Nebuchadnezzar in a similar way, had been true, and how God had blessed their faithfulness! So with others.

The Book of Daniel shows how times in great stress and affliction those who have remained true have been blessed and rewarded. If in the past, surely now when the great oppression, the abomination of the ages, the work of Antiochus, in desecrating all that is sacred and holy, surely, if the people are true and faithful, God will take care of his own, and will bring them a great victory.

Having learned these general characteristics of this kind of literature to which Daniel belongs, I went on. I made quite a study of the book in connection with the history of the world at the time it was written, somewhere about 165 years before Christ, and I could easily trace the meaning of most of the chapter, gone into by Paul, the beasts and the horns and the feet, mixed metal and clay, and so on.

At least three of the visions cover the same period of history, extending from the time of Daniel down to the time of the writing of the book, that is, the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, and in all the visions, the emphasis is laid upon the last part of the period, most of the details describe Antiochus and his persecution of the saints. He is not mentioned by name, but he is so described, that those living at the time could not fail to understand that the little horn, for example, that grew up and became so powerful, was none other than Antiochus; and he is pictured as being the antitype of the beast, the persecutor of the followers of Jehovah.

Thus if you will read in the eleventh chapter of Daniel, you will find the description of Antiochus beginning at verse 21, and extending through the chapter, into considerable detail as to what he did and where he went, showing that the writer was very familiar with these events. After all these details, the description suddenly stops with the words, "Yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." This did happen not long after but the description shows that the writer believed that the book was written before, and that the prediction was based on the writer's confident faith in the Lord's care for his people, and in the downfall of the wicked king.

Well, when I came to see, that so far as real history or actual prediction was concerned, the Book of Daniel had no reference. Yet, even in the time of my life after it was written, then the message came clear and definite to me, not a message of what was going to happen in the future, but of what actually happened—first the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and the spoiling of the Temple by the Romans, and then the destruction of Rome by the Goths and Vandals, and the plundering of the Church by the Mohammedans. All this is that which was written in the book, "And the Lord delivered all the borders of the heathen into his hand." In my youth I learned that in the days of our Lord and the early Christians, the book was well known to the Jewish people as a prophetic book, and I learned that "Christ is the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy and the Antichrist the fulfillment of the prophecies of the Apocalypse." And I have seen how the church has grown, and how the world has been filled with the spirit of the prophecy of Daniel. And I have known that the prophecy of the book was fulfilled as to all its predictions, and the world has been filled with the spirit of the prophecy of Daniel. And I have known that the prophecy of the book was fulfilled as to all its predictions, and that the world has been filled with the spirit of the prophecy of Daniel. I have seen how the church has grown, and how the world has been filled with the spirit of the prophecy of Daniel. And I have known that the prophecy of the book was fulfilled as to all its predictions, and the world has been filled with the spirit of the prophecy of Daniel. And I have known that the prophecy of the book was fulfilled as to all its predictions, and the world has been filled with the spirit of the prophecy of Daniel. A New Year's Letter

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE:

I am going to give you my New Year's message through a brief sketch of Helen Keller's life. I have followed her with interest ever since her life was published in the Ladies' Home Journal seven years ago. She has always seemed very wonderful to me, but since I have seen and heard her she is still more wonderful—a veritable miracle.

I went to Winona Lake for the sole purpose of hearing the joint lecture given before the Winona Assembly, August 4, by Mrs. Anne Sullivan Macy and Helen Keller. From this lecture I gained lessons of great personal benefit; indeed so great was the blessing that came to my soul that I felt I would gladly suffer privations, if need be, for the privilege of attending the lecture. You were much in my thoughts at that time, and while one needs to see and hear her to get the full benefit of the experience, I wondered if I could not pass on a message to you that would be helpful. Some of you are fighting hard battles and at times, no doubt, you are tempted to give up the struggle. This message is intended especially for you.

Mrs. Macy became Helen Keller's teacher twenty-six years ago, the pupil being at that time six years and eight months old.

Mrs. Macy came onto the stage first and told the story of Helen's life in a very simple but impressive way. The story, so far as I am able to repeat it, is as follows:

When Helen was nineteen months old she passed through a very severe sickness, the nature of which is not known. The disease in no way impaired her health but robbed her of sight and hearing.

The family lived at Tusculum, Ala. The parents read of the work that was being done for the blind, deaf and dumb and wrote to Boston to see if a teacher could not be sent to their home who would undertake the education of their little daughter. Mrs. Macy had just graduated from college and she accepted this herculean task.

The first time Mrs. Macy saw Helen, the child was standing in the door of her father's house. As Mrs. Macy approached the house Helen Keller, as she would probably have knocked her over if Mr. Keller had not been behind her. At this time Helen was like a little untamed animal, rolling and tumbling around the house and downstairs and never getting hurt. She was a very inquisitive little body. Everything about the house was subjected to the closest scrutiny by means of her fingers. Mrs. Macy had to undergo an examination. Helen felt of her head, face and arms, took off her hat and put it on her own head and stood up before the mirror the same as one would do who could see. She then took Mrs. Macy's hand bag. Being unable to open it she searched until she found the keyhole, made the movement of unlocking it with one of her fingers, at the same time putting another finger into her mouth, evidently trying to make it known that she expected to find candy in the hand bag. It did not happen, but she continued her search. Of course the trunk was opened and Helen examined its contents fully. She smelt of each package as she removed it from the trunk and detected the box of candy by its fragrance.

She set the box down unopened, probably thinking it would keep and impelled by her woman's curiosity to ascertain the further contents of the trunk. She soon found a doll which had been dressed and undressed. She had learned by experience that it was a great joy when she found the doll wore the same number of garments as herself and that its clothes fastened with buttons and buttonholes so she could dress and undress it. This information that a small child was very active, in fact she was never still except when she was asleep, and just for the sake of having something to do she would dress and undress herself a dozen times a day.

A sign language had been established between Helen and her parents which enabled her to communicate with them to a certain extent. By placing her hand on the side of one's head and bowing the head one could let her know that her request would be granted, and by shaking the head that it would be refused. If she was hungry she put her finger in her mouth; if she wanted bread and butter she made the motions of cutting and spreading a slice of bread; if she wanted ice cream she made the motions of turning an ice cream fountain.

Mrs. Macy began her instructions the next day after she arrived at the home. She took the doll from Helen, then spelled the letters D-O-I-I onto her fingers and made her understand that she must make those signs before she could have the doll. Cake was the next word chosen because of Helen's fondness for that article. She made slow progress at first. If I correctly understood, she learned only twenty-five words the first month. A crisis came in her teaching. She confused the words "milk" and "crying" and at third word that I failed to catch. After the crisis was passed and she came to understand that everything had a name, she advanced rapidly.

At the end of six months she was reading stories and acting them out with her dolls in the nursery.

Helen was fond of the dog, who had borne her rough treatment with a great degree of patience. The next day after she had learned the word "doll" Mrs. Macy found her trying to teach it to the dog. As soon as she had sufficiently advanced, whenever she stumbled against him she would take his paw in her hand and spell out the words, "Excuse me.

Mrs. Macy said a book could be written of Helen's funny sayings during those early days when she was learning to give expression to her thoughts. "Fajance," she said, "means to sit still a long time and be a good girl. I don't like it. Happiness means to skip, hop, jump, and eat a very long banana." Helen, being a green pet simmon, she said, "This pulls me together all over." One day while walking through a field of daisies she said, "I think daisies are very pretty, mother how to me as I walk along." She felt them bending.

When told that mother nature made the chickens, the flowers and the trees she asked what father nature did.

Helen was taken to F. E. Hare's home on her eighth birthday. When he came into the room she hastened to meet him and said, "Hush with your feet. Nancy (the doll) is very sick." She then led him to the couch where Nancy was reclining. At the head of the couch was a stand on which were medicines to relieve Nancy's ailments. Dr. Hale told her she must go out to play with the other blind children of the house Helen.

She insisted that he write down the directions for giving Nancy's medicine, saying, "Men have so many forgets." It was not long until Helen discovered that the family did not use the manual alphabet in conversing and asked for an explanation. Mrs. Macy gave the explanation and Helen said, "I want to learn to talk with my mouth." Mrs. Macy opposed this, thinking it would be time and labor lost, but Helen persisted and she was put under the tutelage of a special teacher for this purpose.

The teacher put Helen's fingers upon the organs of speech while she talked and told her (spelled out on her fingers) that certain sounds had no certain sounds.

Her finger was put in the teacher's mouth to get the different positions of the tongue while speaking. She was first taught to make separately the two sounds that combounded. She was then taught to make them for an entire word. She was taught how to make words.

The first sentence she uttered was, "I'm not dumb now."

In due time she began to plead for a college education. In this she was stoutly opposed. She was opposed to Radcliffe because she wanted to get a degree from Harvard. The faculty refused her application but she would not be put down. She replied, telling them that she wanted a college education as much as did other girls and added, "I see the obstacles in the way but sirs, a good soldier will not admit defeat before the battle." This reply won the faculty. She entered college, taking courses in English, French, Latin and German. The work was very hard because many of the text-books were not printed in the manual alphabet and had to be spelled into her hand, but she persevered, graduated, and received the degree of B. A.

In my next letter I shall tell you more particularly of my impressions of her at Winona Lake, while listening to her lecture.

Very sincerely,

MARHA H. WARDNER.
Young People as Ambassadors for Christ, in the High School

MADGE L. MUNCY

Paper read in Young People's Meeting, Pacific Coast Association, Long Beach, Cal.

We young people can be ambassadors for Christ in many ways and many places, but of the high school our fellow-students are at an age when their lives can be turned either to the right or to the wrong quite easily. We all know that it is easier to turn to the wrong way, and while there are always men who are willing and waiting to lead them down, there are few to lift them up.

Many young people, on entering high school, fall in with some one person or many, who are anxious to lead them into worldly things and away from God and Christianity. Very often these young people are easily influenced and are thus led in the wrong direction. However, this kind of influence is not to some young people who is an out and out Christian, living up to God's teachings and striving to do right in every way, he will be made a stronger Christian by his resistance to the temptation. We need our high schools in every high school. We need young people who are not influenced by every little thing that comes to carry away from God, who will hold up the banner of the cross all the time and strive to lead their fellow-students upward, showing them the higher and better things of life instead of dragging them down into a place from which they may never rise.

There are great opportunities in our high schools for Christian young people to work for the Master. One of the greatest is personal work which there is, and always has been, a very great need. One of the ways in which personal work may be done is through the different Christian societies formed by the high school students. In our Long Beach High School, Bible classes and Christian societies were formed as an outgrowth of the Brown and Curry meetings recently held here. Among these were the Bible classes, the "Out and Out for Christ" society, and the Praise Service. These organizations held meetings once a week at the homes of the students. Only a small majority of the students took much interest in these movements and not many cared to join compared to the large number of students enrolled in our high school. Their lives seemed to be entirely taken up with the worldly things that pertained to their own pleasure and happiness.

This seems to be the way with too many of us. We are willing to give up the best in life in order to get something which we have been made to believe is still better. There is nothing better in all the world than leading a Christian life, at least doing the best we know how and letting God do the rest, which we know is ever ready and willing to do. We are too apt to think only of ourselves and what we like to have or enjoy doing, when by taking a second thought we would realize that God wants us to do just the opposite. Very often the thing we ought to do is hard for us and we can not see why we should do it, but that is not for us to know. God always knows what is best for us and will never ask us to do anything which is not for our good. If we only stop asking why, and be willing to do anything we are called upon, no matter what or where, we might be able to bring joy not only to some one else but also to ourselves.

Young people have a better and greater field to work in. High school students have their lives before them and thus have the best opportunities and privileges. They must choose for themselves either the Christian life which leads to God and the life beyond, or the path, worn hard by many, which leads downward from sin to destruction. Thus Christ is calling for all young people to be ambassadors for him, that their lives and the lives of hundreds of others may be brought to the light and turned into the right channel.

There was a check put on the advance¬ment of our Christian societies in our high school by an ordinance prohibiting the announcing of any advertising, in the school, of anything pertaining to religion. Such as this was considered improper to deal with in any way by the school, while encouraging all other things of the same nature are upheld and encouraged. Any young person who can hold an assembly and make announcements concerning some Bible class or praise service, with a certain percentage of the students jeering and making fun of him is the kind of young person we need in our high school. And such a young person is the king who is not afraid to stand up for the right in everything.

It seems to me that young people keeping the Sabbath have a great many difficulties to confront in their school life. For example, the graduation exercises are nearly always held on Sabbath night. This is one thing which is the hardest, or it seems to me would be the hardest—to put off your years in high school and then be unable to attend your own graduation exercises. Again, if singing in choruses or glee clubs, one finds that the concerts are almost without exception held on Friday night. Students who know you keep the Seventh Day as the Sabbath are keeping close watch of everything you do and are only too anxious to criticize if you do the least thing wrong, no matter how small. We Christian young people may say things on the Sabbath which may not hurt us personally, but may be the cause of leading some one into the wrong path who has been taking our life as an example to live by. Thus if we would be true ambassadors for Christ, we young people must be willing to give up some things, deprive ourselves of worldly pleasures which we would otherwise have, and be ready to do for Christ anything he calls us to do.

Danger is doubly dangerous when we do not know that it exists. A concealed enemy has a deadly advantage. Years ago a Pacific steamship went down off the coast of India, leaving an uncharted rock.

Four hundred lives were lost. A man who was able to swim ashore through the numbing slush-ice, saving himself and another, told later of the criticism that was expressed, after the accident, because there were no uncharted rocks in that course. There are no uncharted rocks in our life course. God has made his chart; it is the life of a Christian. In many ways Christians are almost without exception held on Friday night. Students who know you keep the Seventh Day as the Sabbath have been taking our life as an example. Thus if we would be true ambassadors for Christ, we young people must be willing to give up some things, deprive ourselves of worldly pleasures which we would otherwise have, and be ready to do for Christ anything he calls us to do.

A great war leaves a country with three armies—an army of cripples, an army of mourners, and an army of thieves. —German Proverb.
Annuity Gifts

The Trustees of Alfred University have adopted a method by which money is received in trust and an annuity paid upon it during the life of the donor or some person he may designate to receive the same. Persons who have money from which they wish to receive an assured income during life and which they can devote to some benevolent interest after his death may carefully consider this opportunity of an annuity.

ADVANTAGES OF ANNUITY GIFTS
1. Annuity gifts are the best investments for persons who wish to be free from business cares and who desire a definite assured income during life. They relieve widows and orphans from the labor and responsibility of looking after rents, collecting interest, etc., and also of all loss incurred by inheritance taxes.
2. Annuities make certain that money will not be squandered by legal proceedings or diverted from the object for which it is designed. For this reason they are better than wills, which may be broken or contested at great expense.
3. They make safe investment for those who wish to provide an assured income for life for relatives or others dependent upon them. An annuity to such persons makes it certain that they will not suffer the loss of their income during life.
4. Annuities provide against reverses and the possibility of loss by mistakes in computation.
5. Money given in annuities is not legally subject to tax and consequently the income is net.
6. Money given by annuity contract is invested in trust and becomes an addition to the security which the college property offers, and an additional endowment to the college. Trust funds can not be used for any purpose but must be kept invested in real estate mortgages. The trustees represent some of the ablest financiers of the State and their care and caution make investment doubly secure.
7. No income is lost in annuities by reason of the necessity of loss of time required for retirement, and interest is paid semi-annually on the day it is due.

The principal motive for annuity gifts is, however, that after having had the income of his money during life, the donor may be assured the income forever it will go to the service of others when he no longer needs it. Higher education is one of the most important interests in human society. To leave money to Alfred University is to live helpfully after you are dead, and perpetuate your name as a benefactor by an appropriate memorial.

How Rome Made Peace

There is a great deal of misapprehension and misinterpretation of the historical settings of the coming of Jesus. The age is described as an age of peace, peace throughout the world under the imperial sway of Rome. There was peace in the sense that all kingdoms had been subdued by Rome and attached to her empire. This was the wonderful "Pax Romana." But among the millions of souls who made up that empire there was no lack of poverty, cruelty and oppression. Half the population of the empire were slaves.

Scholars point out the fact that Rome had extended her empire, not by destroying the nations, but by linking them to her family to the wealthy families of Rome, thus establishing a community of interest against the poor people and the slaves, whose soul enriched this aristocratic, plutocratic society. It was a league of all the rich people in the world against all the poor people in the world. The poor lived in constant fear of the rich, and the rich lived in constant achievement of the poor. Insurrections were taking place in all parts of the empire. But the masters had the Roman legions at their disposal, and by the power of arms kept the poor and the slaves in their place.—The Christian Herald.

The "Give Me a Job" Boy

"I want a job!"
The head of the electric lighting concern looked up from his desk and saw a gangling boy of seventeen facing him with a look of quiet, respectful determination that conveyed conviction.

"I haven't any position that you could possibly fill, and right now I'm so driven that—"

"I want a job!" interrupted the boy with an earnest smile that didn't detract from the serious, distinguished expression he wore as you would say.

"And you want a job, sir. I can see that right now. When you first spoke I knew you reminded me of somebody, but I couldn't think who.

When I was a boy we had a dog that used to go off into the woods and hunt coons all by himself.

If he treed his coon he'd start to gnaw the tree down and cut it till somebody hunted him up and chopped the tree down. You've got a sort of family resemblance to that dog. I'll give you a letter to the superintendent."

When a fortnight later, he called at the plant, the foreman remarked:

"Say, that boy you sent out here's the oldest boy you ever saw. He takes his job just as hard as if he were drawing profits or my salary instead of working for nothing a week and paying his own car fare."

"Why, his aunt died the other day, and he didn't come for two days; but he sent a substitute and paid him out of his pocket.

He's the first man on the plant that morning and the last to leave at night. From the minute he gets here till he leaves he's as busy as a boy at a circus. That boy is certainly interested in his work."

A few weeks later the boy spoke to the man who had given him a job:

"A little testing department would save you money," said the boy, "and it wouldn't cost much either. You buy a lot of material first and last, and I've found out that some of it isn't up to standard. They're working considerable off on you."

"How much will it cost?" asked the owner of the plant.

Instantly the boy drew from his pocket a list of every item needed in the equipment. He had it all ready, waiting for the question.

"Get it and go ahead," said the man, after he had glanced over the list.

The laboratory was installed, and saved the business a neat sum of money.

The day that the boy's period of training was up he appeared again at the proprietor's desk and said, "My time is up, sir."

"But you stay," was the quick answer, "and the salary you are going to is going to the unpaid time in which you've been serving me.

And it did. That wasn't so long ago.

The electric lighting plant grew until it was big enough to be 'absorbed.' It has been absorbed several times since; but the boy who struck for a job stuck through every change. Each set of absorbing capitalists saw that he was the man who could work for them. They saw that he knew the business as well as and better than his old shoes.

They played him for a favorite, and today he could buy the man who gave him his first job—buy him out several times over! He is the head of a big electric lighting corporation, and gets a salary of twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year, besides profits in half a dozen thriving interests.

Any boy who has the stuff in him to play the same game as that boy played it will win out. You couldn't keep him down if you buried him under the deadweight of a skyscraper. There are plenty of boys who are waiting to accept a position—and always will be! But when it comes to boys who go out and beat the man for a job—just a plain job in which they have a chance to make good without regard to pay—they're so scarce that they're in danger of being captured for exhibition purposes in museums.

Nothing can stand against a boy of this kind. The give-me-a-job boy is sure to be distributing jobs to others sooner or later. And generally it's sooner.—Chicago Tribune.

Getting a Drink at Sea

Did you ever wonder how birds thousands of miles out to sea get water when they are thirsty? A certain old sailor used to wonder, too, till one day a squall in the tropics cleared the question for him. In the clear sky above a black raincloud suddenly appeared. Then out of an empty space over a hundred sea birds came darting from every direction. They got under the rain cloud, says an exchange, and waited there for about ten minutes, circling round and round, and when the rain came they drank their fill.

In the tropics, where the great sea birds sail thousands of miles from shore, they get their drinking water in that way. They scam a storm a long way off, travel perhaps a hundred miles to get under it, and then swallow enough raindrops to last them till the next storm. Of course, birds on land have plenty of fresh water for their drink.—The Continent.

"If You Can't Smile"

In the vestibule of a certain hospital visitors see a card bearing this advice: "Never utter a discouraging word while you are in this hospital. You should come here only for the purpose of helping. Keep your hindering, sad looks for other places; and if you can't smile, don't go in."

"If you can't smile, don't go in!" It is good advice for others than hospital visitors. Who is beyond the ministry of a kindly smile. It is a tonic to the discouraged. It helps the little child for whom the world holds so much that makes afraid, and it cheers the aged who find life un- speakably lonely. As King Arthur's court was built by music, so the happier life we all hunger for here upon earth is built in large part by the cheerful faces we see as we bear the load of antiquated for us.

Smiles are as indispensable to true success in life as money, mind and might. Not in hospitals only, then, but in the home and on the street there is a call for the sunny smile. To have it is to get the heart right with God and then turn the eyes to the light, for the smile that helps is the smile of heaven-kindled joy and hope.—Exchange.
The Home Department

Not longer than twelve or fifteen years ago, to make this subject quite intelligible to an ordinary audience it would have been necessary to begin with “What it is,” “Its object and purpose,” “How to organize,” etc. Today most, if not all, of you know about the Home Department, even if you have not had a practical, working knowledge of it, a helpful department of Bible-school work.

You know that it is that department of the school that seeks to enrol those who can not, or do not, attend the regular sessions of the school, and yet are willing to study the lessons, at home, at least one-half hour each week, and be considered members of the school. You can see how this tends to unite the home and school, and helps to bridge the chasm that heretofore lay between the family and the church and school. For the very first organization a simple plan quite often is most successful. A superintendent to oversee the work, and visitors to carry quarters and collect records would make a good start; and as the way opens for enlargement, these officers will, no doubt, if they are wisely chosen, prove equal to the opportunity. The help and counsel of the superintendent of the main school and of the pastor of the church should always be sought.

The “new movement” Home Department provides for classes with officers and committees, where these may be made of advantage: (1) the individual class; (2) the family class; (3) the correspondence class; and (4) the school class. Their names suggest, in part, the nature of each. The school class is for those who command the unused time, and a special place and teacher are provided for such. It is an open secret that this result is the great aim of the loyal superintendent and visitors, and it is counted a victory when the report can say, “Our list is diminished because several of our members have come into the school to stay.” Many instances of the value of the correspondence class could be given were it not for making this paper too lengthy. The Home Department, as has been said by well-known authority, “has proved its right to live. It has won its way by supplementing—never supplanting—all the deep foundations of the church and Sabbath-schools in structure and widening all the avenues of their service.”

We have God’s promise that his word shall not return unto him void. Who then can tell how much good the Home Department may do? It is real missionary work, is it not? These are the days of many societies and organizations, some of which tend to spiritual growth and the uplift of humanity. Among the many duties and projects that come to us let us not neglect to give the Bread of Life to hungry souls. Let us not slacken our efforts until “every member of every family is a member of the Bible-study department of the church, studying together as a family the weekly Sabbath-school lessons.”

When shall that time be?

Mrs. J. H. Barcock.

To say that religion has nothing to do with politics is to assert that which is simply false. It was as wise to say that the atmosphere has nothing to do with the principles of architecture. Religion is the vital air of every question. Directly, it determines nothing; indirectly, it conditions every problem that can arise.—P. W. Robertson.

HOME NEWS

ALFRED, N. Y.—Volume IV, No. 3 of the Quarterly Recorder of the First Seventh Day Baptist Church of Alfred, N. Y., has just come to hand. It is a sixteen-page pamphlet filled with information concerning the affairs of the church, and contains a sermon on "The Home," by the pastor. This sermon is practical and timely and will soon be given our readers in the Sabbath Recorder. It was the Sabbath morning sermon, October 9, at Alfred, and, by request, was repeated at Nile, N. Y., on December 4. In response to requests for its publication in some form suitable for distribution, it was given a place in the church Bulletin.

From the Bulletin—we learn that the church is preparing to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary, on the twentieth of October, 1916. A full statement of the denominational budget is given, stating the entire amount expected of the church for denominational work. The young people are to be responsible for the raising of the church's portion of the money. On the board of the denomination, as assigned by the General Conference; the Woman's Evangelical Society will take care of the item assigned to Alfred for the Woman's Board; and the church itself is to raise the sums assigned to it for the Missionary and Tract societies, and for the Sabbath School Board. The plan is so systematized that individuals may subscribe for only two things—the church budget and the denominational budget—instead of seven or eight different things.

The Every Member Canvas, which is becoming quite popular among the churches of this country, was adopted by the church and is explained as follows:

The plan is (1) that every member be solicited for church and denominational funds and asked to contribute on the basis of a certain amount per week; (2) that canvass be made at or just before the beginning of the year; (3) that it all be done in one day or one afternoon; (4) that the church be divided into districts of eight or ten families each; (5) that two men canvass in each district, the two going together to canvass the families of their division; (6) that those who are not reached the day or the afternoon of the general canvass be solicited as soon as possible, and that the non-resident members be asked by correspondence to contribute; and (7) that the canvassers, through their chairman, report at once the results of the canvass, so that the church may know what the resources for the year are to be.

The report of the trustees contains a budget amounting to $2,300 covering church expenses for the coming year. The Woman's Evangelical Society has paid $1,000 on the parish house debt, and the reports of the Sabbath school, the Endowment societies, and Pastor's Class of Intermediates contain several items of interest showing commendable activity.

We give below Pastor William L. Burdick's report in full, as published in the Bulletin:

"The pastor wishes first of all to call your attention to the reports of the other officers, the boards and auxiliary organizations, for much of the work of the church for the year is recorded in these and need not be included in this report. In addition to the pastor's work in particular, he would respectfully report that in addition to the regular duties of his office he has conducted a meeting once each month since April in the Sunday school room, in which he has been assisted by the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, but for the larger part of the season by the Bethel Class, whose president, Mr. Charles Palmer, has worked heartily and efficiently to provide both singers and conveyances. Encouraged by these meetings and upon the urgent advice of the pastor and the Missionary Committee of our Christian Endeavor society, a wave of organization in this same school house and very successfully conducted by the people themselves, the pastor has also helped support the meeting at the Five Corners which the Christian Endeavor society has been conducting every two weeks.

"The second week in July was spent in Chicago attending the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor and the International Convention of the same organization.

"The last half of August was given to work with the Committee on Christian Endeavor and the Tract Society at Milton, Wis. The Bulletin has been published each quarter and there have been several expressions of gratitude to the church during the year for this quarterly visitor.

"Growing out of the duties of the pastor's office and its relation to the Missionary Society, the Tract Society, the United Society of Christian Endeavor, the Federal Council, and the Commission on Faith and Order, the pastor's correspondence long ago showed a heavy burden. For the sake of knowing definitely the amount of work done, a record has been kept and the number of personally written communications sent out during the year has been 794. Under these circumstances it is easy to see how much the pastor appreciates the splendid spirit shown by the members of the community for all these communications, besides an immense amount of other work, have been written on this Christmas gift.

"The number of baptisms and additions to the church has not kept up as large this year as formerly, but after the long period in gathering of last year it could hardly be expected that it would be. There is, however, abundant opportunity still for gathering in, if we are looking, praying and working for it. Taking up the reports of the activities of the church, its work for the year has been above the average, as the various reports and the interest in the weekly appointment from 5 to 5:30, and also the opportunity for a quiet hour for any who wish to avail themselves of it, and the ringing of the bell on Fridays at sundown. The class has also arranged for Harold B. Waite, the field secretary, to speak next Friday evening at the church."

THE SABBATH RECORDER

North Loup, Neb.—The special meetings began January 7. Plan now to do your part and come.

The meeting of the Brotherhood was well attended Sunday night and a splendid time was enjoyed. The singers furnished some splendid music and several took part in an impromptu program. The following were elected to office: president, W. T. Hutchins; vice president, A. H. Babcock; secretary, W. G. Rood; treasurer, C. E. White. At the next meeting we shall have a problem of making a scrap unless all signs fail. —The Loyalist.

Milton, Wis.—A Christmas vespers service was held at the Seventh Day Baptist church, December 21, which was very impressive. The church was dimly lighted by candles. The pipe organ selection by President Daland, the Christmas Carol by, the College Glee Club, and the song, "Holy Night," given by the Treble Clef, were all up to the usual standard. An interesting sermon was given by Professor H. M. Barbour.—Journal-Telephone.

MILTON JUNCTION, Wis.—Rev. Perry Millar, of Janesville, preached at a union evangelistic meeting at the Seventh Day Baptist church Friday evening, and Rev. L. C. Randolph addressed at a similar meeting at the M. E. church on Sunday evening. Both services were well attended and thoroughly appreciated by those present.

The Messengers of the Sabbath school were entertained at the home of their teacher, George Greenman, Monday evening, and enjoyed a picnic supper to which all the boys contributed. Rev. H. N. Joc- dan and E. M. Holston were invited guests.—Journal-Telephone.

WESTERY, R. L.—The Christmas exercises of the Seventh Day Baptist Bible school were held last evening, starting with a supper in the church parlors, about 175 participating.

After the children had done ample justice to the refreshments, they marched to the room above, which had been prettily decorated with Christmas greens, and a large tree and star lighted with variegated electric lights.

The program, which was under the able direction of Mrs. Carey A. Maine, was exceptionally well given, the choirs in the musical farce and the song by the tiny tots bringing down the house. The arrival of Santa Claus with his customary presents completed one of the most enjoyable Yule- tide entertainments given by the school.—Westery Sun.

A soldier in the Civil War had lost his place in his company, and, rather timidly, said to his sergeant, "I wish I had come up behind the line." "Where shall I step in?" "Step in?" said the General; "step in? Step in anywhere. There is fighting all along this line." And that is precisely true of the great battlefield to which you and I belong.—H. E. Fosdick.

The Second Coming of Christ

A study of the second coming of Christ ought to be both important and interesting at this time, because many of the statements which the Master gives concerning this event in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew and parallel passages in Mark and Luke are all the more pressing now that we have the world in its teething stages, taking place right around us at this time. Famines, earthquakes, pestilence, wars and rumors of wars, and men's hearts troubling them for fear of what is coming upon the world. Now, Jesus says all these things would precede his coming again and they are here before us now. Is he coming soon? Of course, there are some people who say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and derive all this as nonsense; but this also is prophecy and having its fulfilment as well as the rest. All these things should direct our thoughts anew to the most important event in the calendar of Christianity.

Is Christ Really Coming Again?

There is not a writer of the New Testament from Matthew to the Revelator who does not mention this second coming of Christ, and so if he is not coming again either the whole of the New Testament is full of lies or else those statements are untrue. Yes, he is coming again; all Christians believe, hope and wait for this greatest event in the history of this old world of ours. We can not explain all these statements away as mere figures of speech nor say they are to be interpreted in a spiritual sense, as the coming of Christ at death or in the change of regime when Jerusalem was destroyed. Common sense and unbiased judgment will accept any of these explanations because they all involve far more difficulties than does the literal coming itself; they are explanations that need explaining.

Jesus says himself, "If I go . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." The angels told the apostles that "this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. . . ." John says, "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." These statements are hardly consonant with a spiritual com- ing of Christ at death, nor with a change of regime from Jewish Christians. If we accept the Bible at all, we must believe that Jesus is coming again, but when will Christ come?

When Will Christ Come?

It would not be difficult to answer this question were it not that a great deal of rubbish has accumulated around it that needs to be cleared away. "Pastor" Fussell says that "the times of the Gentiles will be in 1914, but he speaks about the second coming and language about as equal to that of the lilies of Delphi, and now that very, very ingenious gentleman is trying to explain away that statement, but the statement still stands, as does the time of the Gentiles also, in this year of grace 1915. Now neither man nor angels know the day and the hour when the Son of man cometh, but this gives us the signs that shall precede his coming and told us that when we see these things coming to pass we may know that he is nigh, even at the door. The signs are here and something is going to end. What is it? Is it the coming of Antichrist (2 Thess. 2:3-4)? Is it the coming of Christ for his own (1 Thess. 4:16-18)? Is he coming to judge the world or to usher in the millennial period? We must answer these questions by asking—

How Will Christ Come?

Pre-millennialists say he will come to up his kingdom here on earth and reign with his saints a thousand years. Post-millennialists say this earth will grow gradually better until all the principles and laws of Christ are established here, and there will be a thousand years of the triumphs of the principles of Christianity, and at the end of this period Christ will come to judge the world and usher in his eternal kingdom. Some say he will come in the quiet of night to take out of the world his own, when two shall be in one bed, and "the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left"; others say his coming will be like the lightning which shineth from one end of the heavens to the other. Now both of these ideas can not be false; one may be false and the other true or both may be true.

The SABBATH RECORDER

IS THERE TO BE MORE THAN ONE COMING OF CHRIST? Psalm 110 and Isaiah 53 both describe the first coming of Christ, one as a suffering servant, the other as a conquering king. Both were fulfilled within three days in the events of Calvary and resurrection. Because of this difference the Jews thought there might be two Messiahs: descriptions of his second coming are as difficult to us as were those of his first on the Jews. The twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew and the twentieth chapter of Revelation are strangely parallel, each one describing in figure what the other describes in reality. They seem to de- scribe two, if not three, different comings of Christ, but these may be three events all connected with one coming. Christ comes to receive his own, parable of The Ten Virgins; to judge his own servants, parable of The Talents; to judge the whole world, parable of The Sheep and the Goats. In the twentieth chapter of Revelation, the first part describes the budding of Satan and the first resurrection, Christ receiving his own, that allows the judgment of his own people, the shears and the goats, that is, those who are not of his kingdom, being raised for this judgment; then follows the great white throne- and the general judgment of the dead of all the ages and the assignment if everlasting rewards or punishments. Some people get their ideas of the millennium from this chapter and from what appears to be the judgment of Christ's people, because the saints and martyrs are called to this judgment. But this only is what Christ promises his followers: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28). There are many things connected with the second coming that we would very much like to know. Much is given us to enable us to discern the signs of the times and be always ready, "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."— Walter Whitley, in Baptist Commonwealth.

To fear to do base, unworthy things is valor; if they be done to us, to suffer them is valor too.—Ben Jonson.

The father of a St. Louis lad had given him a 10-cent piece and a quarter, telling him that he might spend it if he wished; or give it to any other on the church distribution plate. At dinner the father asked the boy which coin he had given. "Well, father," responded the lad, "at first it seemed to me that I ought to put the quarter in the plate; but just in time I remembered the other which I had given the church. The Lord loves a cheerful giver," and I knew I could give the 10-cent piece a great deal more cheerfully. So I put that in." - Christian Advocate.

ELEMENTS OF NATIONAL GREATNESS

What makes a nation rich? The number of men the nation has who are noble, wise, pure, self-sacrificing.

What does it profit a nation if it gain the whole world of tools and ships and goods, if the men in the factories are broken in spirit, if workmen go sullen to their tasks, if wives commit suicide?

There is a wealth that is poverty. Woe unto the nation that loads itself down with thick clay, supposing it to be wealth.

The greatness of an individual and nation is threatened when intellect is ahead of the conscience, and culture is ranked above morality. Mental power and moral principle must journey forward side by side. Unfortunately, our generation seems to know the right, but to be losing the power of doing it. The school has lent the intellect wings, but the conscience crawls. The reason moves swiftly along the highway with the speed of a palace car; the virtues follow slowly, as if moving in an ox-cart.

Would that our generation could do all it knows and obey every principle it has discovered.—Nelson Dwight Hill.
