Preface

Instead of venture money and hockey stick growth many entrepreneurs seek freedom in the form of a lifestyle business. Both startups and lifestyle businesses are great ways to break free from your current job in corporate America but they do entail different paths. Startups focus on growth (according to an essay¹ by Y Combinator founder Paul Graham) while freedom of time and mobility might be more important to others. Tropical Talk Radio² is a podcast that focuses on those values.

The ever increasing ubiquity of high-speed Internet has made it easier for people to collaborate and do business pretty much anywhere on Earth. The hosts of Tropical Talk Radio, Dan and Ian, run a business from both San Diego and Bali with products being produced in China and sold around the world.

They share some of the challenges they encounter and solutions they've found. What I've found most helpful is their views about the mindset that has made them successful. Your mindset is what is going to get you through when you're doing something as difficult as starting a business from scratch.

I encourage you all to check out their podcast (episodes tend to be short and sweet at around twenty to thirty minutes long) for the full context of my notes.

Keep hustling.

If you spend 330 days inside a foreign country you can qualify for tax credits and exclusions.

Time spent in transit doesn't count as time spent in a foreign country.

FICA, Social Security, etc. have to be paid before the exclusion.

You have to report your foreign bank accounts if you have more than $10,000 cumulative outside of the U.S.
