Introduction

These poems are fragments of a singular, recurring voyage—an exploration that begins in the quiet of a room and expands to the very edge of the cosmos. They chart a course beyond the physical body, initiated by a simple, surrendered intention: to see what lies beyond the veil of ordinary awareness.

This is a chronicle of ascent, of moving through the familiar boundaries of ceiling and sky into the silent, star-dusted theater of the universe. It's an account of witnessing our Earth shrink to a precious, blue marble and of journeying further into the galactic expanse where scale and time dissolve. At the heart of this exploration is the discovery of a universal constant—an all-pervading, brilliant white light, the very essence of which is unconditional love and ceaseless giving.

These verses are an attempt to translate the untranslatable; to give words to the silent hum of existence and to capture the scent of starlight. They grapple with the profound implications of this experience: the nature of free will, the genius of renewal, and the undeniable, interwoven fabric of synergy that connects us all. This collection is an invitation to suspend disbelief and travel inward by journeying outward, to consider the possibility that the most profound truths are waiting just beyond the edges of our sight. Hindi translation for all poems are provided at the end of the book.

Poem 1: Intention's Call

In the indigo quiet of night, I set my mind free, Asking the spirit, with the scent of rain on stone, "What do you want me to see?"

No guiding path, just surrender complete,
A deep, golden hum of vibrations thrummed, pulling me from my seat.

Through ceiling and roof, with a soundless rush, I rocketed high,
Falling upward like scarlet fire into the velvet sky. Silver-laced clouds parted, Earth shrank to a blue, marbled stone,
Wrapped in a pale, shimmering bubble where life's dramas are sown.

A subtle pearlescent glow whispered from voids all around,
Growing brighter, a crystalline chime, revealing love's boundless ground.

Unconditional giving, the heart of it all,
In this diamond-white light, I heard freedom's eternal call.

Poem 2: The Exit

Techniques whispered, intentions laid bare,
Vibrations flashed like a silver-blue storm on the air.
Body left behind, a low, fading hum, consciousness soared,
Through walls and night, with the scent of ozone, my spirit explored.
Skyward I flew, with the whistle of solar wind, as if shot from a gun,
Lucid and calm, in a glow of soft gold, the journey begun.
Earth below, a sapphire rock in a thin veil of white, Holding joys, struggles, the crimson threads and cool blues of the new.
A lavender glow emerged faintly, from everywhere near,
Ignored at first, then its warm, silent song dispelled all fear.
Brighter it grew, till the universe shone,
In love's pure, fragrant embrace, I was never alone.
