

Cattie

Cattie MacKinnon's life has never been the same since her mom's cancer diagnosis. But when her mom's health improves, Cattie decides to move away from her hometown of Denver to go to college in Boston. After graduating, Cattie marries and builds a successful career, until a series of life-altering events leads her back to Denver.

When her mom's cancer returns, Cattie—whose husband has left her for another woman—leaves Boston to help her family. Her new life in Denver is relatively quiet and simple, but that all changes when she crosses paths, once again, with the handsome and wealthy celebrity bachelor, Scott Williams.

Scott

Scott Williams grew up in modest circumstances in Colorado Springs. His mother passed away when he was young, and it was up to him and his father to rebuild their lives—and they did so, by rebuilding houses. While attending college in Boulder, Scott encounters a man who changes his life, and puts him on track to gross over a billion dollars in the Denver construction industry.

Scott is living a life he could have never imagined: his development company is thriving, he is a regular feature in the Society section of the Denver newspaper, and he is the founder of the largest and most popular charity event in the city. The only thing he is missing is someone to love; someone who will love him for more than just his money.

I'm With You

After meeting on an airplane when they were teenagers, Cattie and Scott move inadvertently between each other's lives until twenty years later, when Cattie unknowingly becomes Scott's employee. Scott pursues a relationship with Cattie, but she is wary of his fame and fortune—and her own failed marriage. Will their pasts hinder their ability to be together?
