This image shows a table with a grid pattern. The table has 2 columns and 10 rows. The grid is composed of thin, light gray lines. Two thick, vertical, dark green bars are positioned within the table, one in the first column and one in the second column, extending from the top to the bottom of the grid area.

The image depicts a grid structure, likely a table or ledger, consisting of 10 columns and 30 rows. Two prominent, solid dark green vertical bars are positioned in the second and eighth columns from the left. These bars extend from the top to the bottom of the grid, effectively dividing the grid into three main sections: a first column on the left, a large central section between the two bars, and a final column on the right. The grid lines are thin and light gray, creating a clear pattern of cells.
