

In the Arena Podcast

By: Hannah Evans

9/15/20

The term podcast comes from combining the word iPod and broadcast. Podcasts are recorded audio files that are posted to the internet for the general public to access. You're able to download podcasts on personal devices and listen to them wherever. They are known to have episodes where the host can choose a topic and discuss it.

This year for the first time Deerfield Schools has a podcast called In the Arena. Nathaniel Rivas - a senior at Deerfield High School - is hosting the podcast. He will be interviewing people in the school and community about everything going on this year. He has been creating personal podcasts at his house and decided to bring his technology to the school to help with the school news. When asked why he likes doing podcasts, Nathaniel talked about how it helps you connect with others. "You can really get to know someone when you have that conversation one on one," he commented.

When asked who he planned on interviewing he said "the whole school, all the teachers and players." His podcast is updated weekly on the school website, so go and give it a listen. While you're there, check out the other news stories on our page as well!

So far this year Deerfield has had several sporting events. While High School football and volleyball have not won yet, they are getting better with each game. We have had a few cross country meets; they have been doing very well, the Middle School especially. Christian Botello has won first place 2 times in a row. Until further notice, this week's meet has been cancelled and their next meet is on the 26th. This week we had High School volleyball at Moscow and Middle School football at Western Plains on Tuesday. Thursday there is Middle School volleyball at Fowler, and Friday there is a High School home football game at 7. Please come out and support our teams!