

Jacqueline Dyer Memorial Scholarship

In 1945, a Dierks High School Sophomore, Jacqueline Simpson (Dyer) noticed that, unlike many of our neighboring schools, our school was without an Alma Mater. In a study hall class, she began to write the words that have been echoed through the school's halls for decades.

Ever will we sing thy praises.

Ever will we think of thee

As a school of pleasant hours

And a school of pleasant memories.

We love you, dear old Dierks High School;

We think you are supreme

Because you're such a grand old school

We hold with high esteem.

With a stroke of a pen, she wrote the words that united as a school and a family and have instilled pride and honor in the students of Dierks High School. When that familiar tune begins to play, people, young and old alike, stand at attention and raise their index finger in the air and begin to sing to the words from the heart.
