

CLASS INTERRUPTIONS

The board of education believes strongly that the educational material presented in the classroom is the most important ingredient of a student's school day. It also believes that many education support services which may interrupt a class period could be accomplished better, and would allow more time for education, if handled at another time or place.

Therefore, the board supports the concept that all class interruptions should be kept to a minimum. The superintendent and the principals should monitor such interruptions to determine that they are necessary, brief, and infrequent.
