LHS Audio-Video broadcast class now on the air

Livingston High School broadcasts produced by the Audio Video class in the Career and Technical Education department can now be viewed on the air. Tanya Cain's students have a TV studio at LHS where they film and edit productions which are posted to their Youtube channel and aired on LivCom's TV Station. LHS Alum, Royden Ogletree visited broadcast classes this week to help give students industry pointers. Ogletree is a sports multimedia journalist with KWTX TV Channel 10 in Waco. While attending Baylor University, Ogletree interned at CBS Sports in New York City. After graduating Baylor with a Communications degree he worked in Beaumont at KBMT before returning to Waco.

Audio-Video Technology and Communications is one of the new classes offered this year at LHS. Students taking this class envision their future jobs in filmmaking, film production, and broadcasting and will follow the Communications Career Cluster to increase their understanding of the industry.

Royden Ogletree uses his sister, Maggie to help with a demonstration while describing the focal points of filming and zooming in on a subject.

Audio-Video Technology is a Career Cluster offered at Livingston High School in the Career & Technical Education (CTE) department. Each program of study is much like a college major and allows a focus of study at LHS enabling students many different certifications.
