Beyonce outfit formation tour

Pictured: Getty Images Beyonce kicked off her World Tour in Miami on Wednesday night - making everyone who isn't at Marlins Park feel some big FOMO on Thursday morning. The audience was treated to being killed off by the pop star's hits as well as songs from her new album Lemonade. Queen Bey's fans were also on full blast, providing perfectly windy locks as she stood on the edge of the stage. They sold out in the summer and we'll stop in 22 cities in the US and 16 cities across Europe and the UK. On stage on Wednesday, Beyoncé stuck with her favorite concert costume: the bodysuit. But this time you look extremely designed by balmain, Roberto Cavalli, DSquared2, Gucci and others. See below for every look from The Tour. Beyoncé's Balmain Forming World Tour. Balmain Custom-made, inspired by Victorian inspiration from Balmain, is made of French lace with a floral motif and hand-embroidered with pearls, rhinestones and glass beads. Olivier Rousteing proudly demonstrated his work on Instagram with photos and caption When Balmain Army became an infantry army, along with a video that featured Bey and her silk curls in action. DSquared2DSquared2 had the chance to design Beyoncé's leather jacket from the super bowl show earlier this year, so it's no surprise that the design duo created a brand new look for the singer's world tour featuring not one - but two bodysuits: one from a lace tattoo and another it's a crystal mesh mesh. Bey paired them with a bustier, wide brim, leather gloves and jewellery ankle boots. We are crazy about Beyoncé and working with her to create this opening for the formation tour is such a huge thrill and honor, designers Dan and Dean Caten said in a statement. Roberto CavalliPeter Dundas of Roberto Cavalli also designed a bodysuit for Beyoncé adorned with black rhinestones and a gold metal thread. Plush velvet tiger boots, which were topped off by the military-style ensemble. Stylist Marni Senofonte created a Gucci-inspired outfit inspired by the brand, which featured the brand's logo, the versions of which were seen to the dancers. Alessandro Michele and his team wanted to get into the game. also a custom-designed style for Bey, which featured sequined bodysuits with geometric print and matching red mink coat in collaboration with artist GucciGhost. When Beyoncé performed in Houston, TX, on May 7, Gucci's Michelin provided her with another bespoke bodysuit made of crumbling tulle and sequins and adorned with a black beaded panther. Atsuko Kudoza balanced the embellishment, print and patterns on Beyoncé's other bodysuits, the pop star sported a sophisticated version - except for her puffy shoulders and ruffled neckline - made entirely of bright red latex London-based designer Atsuko Kudo. Sparkling Crystals Silence, what Beyoncé concert is finished without a sparkling crystal bodysuit? Her nude fishnet socks were cut at the ankles so she could sing, dance and splash in shallow water during the show. 5/10/16: Adrienne Landau in her hometown of Houston, Beyoncé performs Daddy Lessons, in the country style of her new album, in designer Saulo Villela's custom floor length for Adrienne Landau. The singer shared a video on her Facebook page about creating the fashion on her tour. The immediate inspiration behind concert wear is Beyoncé's visual album Lemonade, which carries Antebellum's themes (since it was filmed in New Orleans), which presents Victorian details such as lace, curls and high collars. designer Marnie Senofonte went in a similar direction to dress Beyoncé on the road, getting on with what she calls Victorian Street. Beyonce/Facebook lemonade proved the perfect foundation for the tour's wardrobe, so designers sent in sketches based on these visual effects, and Beyoncé and her team chose and chose from the applications submitted. Beyoncé and I went through them and decided what we liked, what we didn't like, what we could change, and then we sent them back, they re-counted and decided which pieces we wanted to do, Séneofonte said. Some of these convex sketches include bustier DSquared2, Balmain white lace sleuth, Alexandre Vauthier red latex and fur look, Roberto Cavalli ensemble with animal print thigh boots and Atsuko Kudo red trucker Victorian collar. Other behind-the-scenes photos show the costume team cutting holes under the armpits in the dancers' costumes to help them move more comfortably and paint their thighs to better suit their skins. Beyoncé/Facebook It's so exciting to see something that was in your mind that you worked [on] so much, Senofonte said. All this disappears when you're there and you live in it for those two hours. Last night in Miami, A-lyki got an A-game while she apologized, Dad's Lessons, and of course, Forming a scary crowd. And we can't stop singing the praises of her sartorial shear. Queen Bey showed off her toned, mile-long legs in a number of long bodysuits that appealed to her. For Formation, she sported a white balmain bodysuit (above), complete with French lace and a silk embellished fringe that didn't signal #BalmainArmy, but Beyoncé's army. Above the knee soft gray boots and windy hair complete the look. While singing barefoot in water, Bey donned a crystal-embellished nude bodysuit (above), which features a certain Britney Spears Toxic Vbra. RELATED: Beyoncé Just for internet breaks with Lemonade Release We can't wait to see what other iconic fashion announcements Bey will make as the tour continues through August 3, 2016. At Beyoncé's last holiday party for her company, Parkwood, costumes from her Grammy-nominated visual album Lemonade were put on display. The singer's haute couture became a hot topic after debuting at HBO's premiere of the album on April 23, sparking praise from magazines such as Vogue and tears of imitations. The customized designer costumes from the album spilled into her World Tour of Formation, where she took on projects from Balmain, Gucci, Roberto Cavalli and others. But Bey's journey to the wardrobe of the best designers takes two decades to choose from. Here, a look back at her masterfully executed evolution-style tour. December 16, 2016 by Scott Gries/ImageDirect. For years, Beyoncé's mother Tina Lawson shaped and created the wardrobe on stage worn for her daughter and Destiny's Child, often matching or coordinating costumes for the group. In addition to Beyoncé's mother, stylist Tayter Tayter has been part of Beyoncé's team since destiny dutch days. He helped create an appearance with Ms. Lawson for Beyoncé's first solo tour during the band's stay. Red embroidered skirt and matching top. Wearing a green Paisley dress designed by Tina Knowles' fashion line House Of Dereon. By her next solo tour, Lawson and Hunter reached out to designers to help create more glamorous, intricate costumes, such as a silver dress she wore into a glittering mini-dress. French fashion designer Thierry Mugler came out of retirement to become the main costume designer for Beyoncé *1 Am . * Tour in 2009. Mugler also serves as a creative adviser for the tour, giving advice on everything from kit to lights. Beyoncé relies on designers to create her performance. Philip Blond told InStyle: 'Our original inspiration was the female nudes painted by Tamara de Lempicka and the idea of them being covered with crystallised honey that provided the colour palette. Here, she wears one of many others to come, a white Swarovski design inlaid by Ralph & Russo. This kind of Versace fishing net has become mainstream for World tour with husband, Jay Z. According to Versace, the costume took about 200 hours to create. She eavesdrops on diesel to create a multitude of denim-looking suits, one in her preferred silhouette. Of the fabric, Diesel's Nicola Formichetti said: 'Dancing in full denim is very difficult, so we used a special denim that was patented and developed in our factories in Italy called Jog Jeans. Jog looks and is treated like denim, but feels like a tracksuit that wears it optimally. A treat marked Versace. Other designers who have contributed to the tour include Alexander Vann and Michael Costello. Beyoncé's most recent tour, The Formation World Tour went full luxury. She enlisted the help of stylist Marni Senofonte, who helped style the look of Beyoncé's visual album, Lemonade, to organize the costumes on the tour. Here she wears a red latex bodysuit by Atsuko Kudo with matching thigh-high boo and leather. Balmain was stuck to create this flowing, ruffled bodysuit. The costume is made of French lace and covered with pearls, rhinestones and glass beads. This custom DSquared2 look includes not one, but two bodysuits: one of crystal encrusted mesh nets, the other from beads lace. Beyoncé's top tour wouldn't be complete without a custom Gucci bodysuit.
