

FIND YOUR SUMMER focus

This worksheet exercise is designed to help you inventory and prioritize your scrapbooking to-do items. Use it to release the weight of carrying these ideas in your head and begin to find clarity around your actions.

Section 1. Think about all the scrapbooking projects and activities you're currently working on (excluding any new projects to document this summer). List those in the first column. Cross out anything that can wait until fall to be worked on again and copy those to the middle column. In the final column, prioritize the remaining items with 1 being the most important. If you have more than 4 items, reconsider whether those activities can wait until fall.

Section 2. Will you work on a special project to document this summer in the moment or soon after? (If not, you may skip Section 2.) Use this section to think through potential approaches to summer scrapbooking, such as layouts, mini books, pocket pages, or photo books. List the pros and cons so that you can make an educated decision. For each approach, make sure to consider whether it fills you up (i.e. makes you feel excited) and fits your lifestyle (i.e. is doable this summer).
