Visitors to the Promenade had mixed opinions to a proposal to increase private security guards in the area.

Downtown Santa Monica, the nonprofit business district covering the area, recently voted to transition $1.7 million from its ambassador program to a new contract with Covered 6 security for dedicated security guards. The ambassadors are contracted through Block by Block and the company has been criticized by some for doing too little to address crime and homelessness in the area.

Covered 6 security teams will operate with both armed and unarmed personnel, but all will be wearing bodycams. The company said their primary mission is to de-escalate every single situation no matter how long it takes.

The Daily Press spent several hours on the Promenade on Tuesday, June 20 asking people what they thought about the proposal to increase security guards in the area. Of the 24 individuals who responded, 12 were neutral on the proposal, nine viewed it favorably and three thought it was a bad idea.

Santa Monica resident Maya Brotherton said she already felt safer in Santa Monica than other places due to the City's existing police force but she said additional security might motivate her to shop a little later in the evening.

"I think I would feel more inclined to come down here later, I wouldn't be as scared about my timing walking around here if there was more security and stuff and at night time especially," she said. "Definitely parking garages are kind of scary because especially some of them don't have cameras, either. And over night by the Pier is really scary sometimes like that one intersection around Colorado is really weird sometimes. I think otherwise it feels safer in here for the most part then like the rest of Santa Monica."

Resident Duron Slyvester said he'd probably come to the Promenade more with the additional security but wanted it to be paid for out of visitor taxes.

"It costs more for us versus it

New version of the Main Street market takes root on Sundays

A new iteration of the Main Street Farmers Market is sprouting up on Sundays and organizers want the post-pandemic event to be as enticing for its produce as it is for entertainment.

The Main Street market has long been the least farmer-focused of Santa Monica’s four (Wednesday/Saturday Downtown, Saturday on Pico and Sunday on Main Street). Officials said that while the market will retain its beloved music stage and prepared food options, they hope to raise a new generation of market-goers who can appreciate and patronize the actual farmers.

Market Manager Carla Rosin,
The timing could not have been better. A massive UC San Francisco study of California’s worst-in-the-nation homelessness crisis was released Tuesday as Gov. Gavin Newsom and legislative leaders were negotiating details of a new state budget, with homelessness spending as one of the knottiest issues.

The study bolsters previous research which concluded that California’s chronic shortage of housing, which imposes crushing costs on low-income families, lies at the heart of the crisis.

About a third of California’s 40 million people live in poverty or near-poverty, United Ways of California recently reported. Sudden illness, an accident, a layoff or an unexpected car repair bill can easily lead to unpaid rent, eviction and a lack of shelter.

Homelessness, the UCSF study found, often leads to – or exacerbates – alcohol or drug dependence, mental health problems and violence, indicating that its victims need more than just roofs over their heads.

“Something goes wrong, and then everything else falls apart,” the study’s lead researcher, Dr. Margot Kushel, the director of the Benioff Homelessness and Housing Initiative at UCSF, told the New York Times. “Everything in their life gets worse when they lose their housing: their health, their mental health, their substance use.

“This is a problem of this toxic combination of deep poverty and high housing costs,” Kushel added. “We’re a state, like every state in this country, that has a lot of very poor people, and we just don’t have the housing for them.”

The study recommends a wide array of services and projects to help those experiencing chronic homelessness to get off the streets and protect others from the same fate.

It would seem to bolster the demands of city and county officials not only for additional billions of dollars to help homeless Californians escape their plight, but for a multi-year state commitment to provide continuity.

While Newsom has been willing to provide local governments with some funds, he’s been highly critical of their homelessness efforts and so far unwilling to make long-term commitments.

That conflict was evident when the state seemingly had oodles of money, and has become even sharper now that Newsom and legislators must contend with deficits that could continue for the remainder of Newsom’s governorship.

Interestingly, the Benioff study was requested by Dr. Mark Ghaly, Newsom’s secretary of health and human services, who said, in a statement, “this study reinforces the importance of comprehensive and integrated supports,” which is what local officials advocate in their demands for additional state aid.

The state plays only a tangential role in providing housing and social, medical, addiction and mental health services to those in squalid encampments that have become unwanted California symbols and fodder for political and media critics.

US approves chicken made from cultivated cells, the nation’s first ‘lab-grown’ meat

JONEL ALECIA AND LAURA UNGAR
Associated Press

For the first time, U.S. regulators on Wednesday approved the sale of chicken made from animal cells, allowing two California companies to offer “lab-grown” meat to the nation’s restaurant tables and eventually, supermarket shelves.

The Agriculture Department gave the green light to Upside Foods and Good Meat, firms that had been racing to be the first in the U.S. to sell meat that doesn’t come from slaughtered animals — what’s now being referred to as “cell-cultivated” or “cultured” meat as it emerges from the laboratory and arrives on dinner plates.

The move launches a new era of meat production aimed at eliminating harm to animals and drastically reducing the environmental impacts of grazing, growing feed for animals and animal waste.

Instead of all of that land and all of that water that’s used to feed all of these animals that are slaughtered, we can do it in a different way,” said Josh Tetrick, co-founder and chief executive of Eat Just.

“Instead of all of that land and all of that water that’s used to feed all of these animals that are slaughtered, we can do it in a different way,” said Josh Tetrick, co-founder and chief executive of Eat Just, which operates Good Meat.

The companies received approvals for federal inspections required to sell meat and poultry in the U.S. The action came months after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration deemed that products from both companies are safe to eat. A manufacturing company called Joins Biologics, which works with Good Meat, was also cleared to make the products.

Cultivated meat is grown in steel tanks, using cells that come from a living animal, a fertilized egg or a special bank of stored cells. In Upside’s case, it comes out in large sheets that are then formed into shapes like chicken cutlets and sausages. Good Meat, which already sells cultivated meat in Singapore, the first country to allow it, turns masses of chicken cells into cutlets, nuggets, shredded meat and sausages.

But don’t look for this novel meat in U.S. grocery stores anytime soon. Cultivated chicken is much more expensive than meat from whole, farmed birds and cannot yet be produced on the scale of traditional meat, said Ricardo San Martin, director of the Alt:Meat Lab at University of California Berkeley.

The companies plan to serve the new food first in exclusive restaurants: Upside has partnered with a San Francisco restaurant called Bar Crenn, while Good Meat dishes will be served at a Washington, D.C., restaurant run by chef and owner Jose Andrés.

Company officials are quick to note the products are meat, not substitutes like the Impossible Burger or offerings from Beyond Meat, which are made from plant proteins and other ingredients.

Globally, more than 150 companies are focusing on meat from cells, not only chicken but pork, lamb, fish and beef, which scientists say has the biggest impact on the environment.

Upside, based in Berkeley, operates a 70,000-square-foot building in nearby Emeryville. On a recent Tuesday, visitors entered a gleaming commercial kitchen where chef Jess Weaver was sautéing a cultivated chicken filet in a white wine butter sauce with tomatoes, capers and green onions.

The finished chicken breast product was slightly paler than the grocery store version. Otherwise it looked, cooked, smelled and tasted like any other pan-fried poultry.

“The most common response we get is, ‘Oh, it tastes like chicken,’” said Amy Chen, Upside’s chief operating officer.

Good Meat, based in Alameda, operates a 100,000-square-foot plant, where chef Zach Tyndall dished up a smoked chicken salad on a sunny June afternoon. He followed it with a chicken “dish” served on a bed of potato puree with a mushroom-vegetable demi-glace and tiny purple cauliflower florets. The Good Meat chicken product will come pre-cooked, requiring only heating to use in a range of dishes.

Chen acknowledged that many consumers are skeptical, even squeamish, about the thought of eating chicken grown from cells.

“We call it the ‘ick factor,’” she said.

The sentiment was echoed in a recent poll conducted by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research. Half of U.S. adults said that they are unlikely to try the new products, while seven to 10 years before they hit the wider market, said Sebastian Bohn, who specializes in cell-based foods at CRB, a Missouri firm that designs and builds facilities for pharmaceutical, biotech and food companies. Cost will be another sticking point. Neither Upside nor Good Meat officials would reveal the price of a single chicken cutlet, saying only that it’s been reduced by orders of magnitude since the firms began offering demonstrations.

Eventually, the price is expected to mirror high-end organic chicken, which sells for up to $20 per pound.

San Martin said he’s concerned that cultivated meat may wind up being an alternative to traditional meat for rich people, but will do little for the environment if it remains a niche product.

“If some high-end or affluent people want to eat this instead of a chicken, it’s good,” he said. “Will that mean you will feed chicken to poor people? I honestly don’t see it.”

Tetrick said he shares critics’ concerns about the challenges of producing an affordable, novel meat product for the world.

But he emphasized that traditional meat production is so damaging to the planet it requires an alternative — preferably one that doesn’t require giving up meat altogether.

“I miss meat,” said Tetrick, who grew up in Alabama eating chicken wings and barbecue. “There should be a different way that people can enjoy chicken and beef and pork with their families.”

Who will have the 2023 song of the summer? We offer some predictions

MARIA SHERMAN
AP Music Writer

The sun is shining, the beach is calling, and school is out: It's time to prepare the song of the summer.

Often, there's a clear champion: In 2017, Luis Fonsi, Daddy Yankee, and Justin Bieber's "Despacito" was unavoidable. In 2019, Lil Nas X's ubiquitous "Old Town Road" foretold future superstardom. Olivia Rodrigo's "Drivers License" did the same in 2021. But that's not always the case.

Was Harry Styles' "As It Was" the go-to jam of the 2022 season? Who claimed the title during the summer-that-barely-was in 2020? When all the world's music is available on streaming platforms, can genre-loyal listeners agree on a single song of the summer?

What if they didn't have to? Well, here are AP's 2023 song(s) of the summer predictions — and holders of each crown from past years:

Club song of the summer: "Put It On Da Floor Again" by Latto ft. Cardi B

Rapper Latto's combative, no-nonsense flow atop a hot, minimalist beat on "Put It On Da Floor" makes it a club-ready contender for song of the summer. It also doubles as a seasonal mantra: "I'm sexy dancin' in the club again. I'm sipping my drink and a half. I'm on the dance floor again!" It makes it a club-ready contender.

Past champion: "Break My Soul" by Beyoncé (2022)

Song of the summer that inexplicably came out in January: "Boy's a Liar PT. 2" by PinkPantheress, Ice Spice

The dream duet of PinkPantheress hyperpop-punk and lackadaisical rapper Ice Spice created "Boy's a Liar PT. 2," a treatise on modern dating with an undeniable hook, "I'm a liar, baby. I'm a liar, I'm a liar, but I'm your, I'm your, I'm your baby."

PinkPantheress: Ice Spice created "Boy's a Liar PT. 2," a treatise on modern dating with an undeniable hook, "I'm a liar, baby. I'm a liar, I'm a liar, but I'm your, I'm your, I'm your baby.""I'm a liar, baby. I'm a liar, I'm a liar, but I'm your, I'm your, I'm your baby."

Past champion: "Next Girl" by Carly Pearce (2020)

Song of the summer ... this week: "Padam Padam" by Kylie Minogue

Like a summer fling, Kylie Minogue's disco heartbeat "Padam Padam" is crush-worthy pop music for those who like their songs to burn bright, fast, and hard.

Past champion: "Work From Home" by Fifth Harmony (2016)

Biggest song of the year, and therefore the default song of the summer: "Last Night" by Morgan Wallen

The reign of Morgan Wallen continues into the summer, with his country pop-rock breakup record "Last Night" dominating terrestrial radio — and, likely, the headphones of the person next to you.

Past champion: "Somebody That I Used to Know" by Gotye, Kimbra (2011)

Song of the summer that's actually a cover: "Fast Car" by Luke Combs

The country star takes the Tracy Chapman classic and turns it into a North Carolina campfire tune. Perfect for driving in your car, speed so fast.

Past champion: "Fast Car" by Jonas Blue, Dakota (2015) — or really any another cover of "Fast Car," past and present

Song for the Swifties' summer: "Karma" by Taylor Swift

In a phrase: Karma is my boyfriend, Karma is a god, "Karma" is everywhere this summer? We offer some predictions...

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED:
THE HOT CLUB OF LOS ANGELES – from their website: “Hot Club’s band of virtuoso, Django-style 1930s gypsy swing jazz is found nowhere else and even if it were, it couldn’t possibly be this good. These guys are masters, individually and collectively. You will find it hard to stop smiling all night. - Santa Monica Daily Press” And may I add, they manage to record and play high-profile gigs and still show up every Monday, no matter the weather, for years. Aren’t we lucky? Mon 9 p.m., Cinema Bar, Culver City, no cover.

said the entertainment and events are a great way to bring people into the market and she is working on programs to translate that foot traffic into food purchases.

“I really focusing on bringing bring that awareness that these farmers that come from hundreds of miles really need to be supported,” she said. “So that’s my dream and my goal is to go beyond having a market that is there for great entertainment.”

She said part of that effort will capitalize on younger residents.

“That been a joy to just really have a strong focus on kids and kid activities,” she said. “I think kids are the future and kids get excited about farmers markets at a young age. They’re gonna get their parents excited about it and there’s more opportunity to really direct people to farmers markets for the future and gain more support for farmers and good, clean, healthy food.”

While the market is encouraging people to get their food fresh from the source, it’s still offering a variety of programs to make the experience fun with a focus on that youth demographic.

Last month, the Samohi Jazz Bands performed and more special guests are planned to be featured in the future, such as Climate Action Santa Monica (CASM) alongside the always popular main stage. A couple of the events at the market to look forward to are performances from the Lazy Dog Mountain Band on July 2 and the Marimba Band on Sept. 2.

“[The goal is] to open that door to people that don’t usually gravitate towards farmer’s markets,” said Rosin.

In order to achieve that, the market is also trying out a new scavenger hunt game, brought on through a partnership with Cultivate L.A, a non-profit focused on food systems issues and food insecurity, and Value Co. By appealing to youths’ focus on value propositions, they hope to engage a new demographic and help support the program going forward. The last day to play is Sunday, June 25, and the scavenger hunt 2.0 is planned for the market in the fall.

“We’re looking forward to having more of that: different activities and different entertainment and different communities represented at the market,” said Rosin.

While they are intent on making the market a comfortable environment for families and friends to hang out at, there are also new vendors, including new fruit vendors as well as an Asian vegetable vendor. They continue to have a variety of prepped food vendors, hosting local Santa Monica restaurants such as Maestro Coffee and SO CALSO, alongside baked goods and a new dumpling stall.

“There’s always an ebb and flow with the seasons, but it’s fun to have different items at the market for people to experience and different farms for people to experience,” said Rosin.

The market is also focused on making their products affordable to all customers, partnering with Market Match, a USDA matching program to help individuals afford fresh fruits and vegetables.

“Having the Market Match program at the farmers market so that CalFresh recipients can actually afford to purchase food at the farmers market has been such a great opportunity,” said Rosin.

The market is held every Sunday from 8:30 a.m. - 1:30 p.m. at 2640 Main Street, join them this Sunday for a Solstice Celebration with Bach2Rock kid jam at 9 a.m. on the lawn with special guest, Cadre Scott, at 10 a.m. Kiki and the Sunnyside Chalkers 8:30-10:30 a.m. and CASM - induction stoe demo, SM Community Gardens - Ocean Waste survey.

City governments are the main overseers of housing construction and joust with the state, increasingly over zoning, building permits and other hurdles for projects to house low-income families and individuals – the ones most in peril of becoming homeless.

Meanwhile, county officials provide welfare, medical and mental health services with local, state and federal funds and often squabble with their city counterparts over how those programs are sited and administered in urban centers.

The Benioff study tells us that contrary to popular belief, those lacking shelter are overwhelmingly Californians, not migrants from other states, who largely remained in their communities after falling on hard times.

The U.S. Census Bureau, which will not release data on homelessness this year, also reports the most recent number of homeless Americans was 583,424 in 2020.

of the week, all aimed at helping seafood lovers taste and learn more about the positive impacts of responsible aquaculture.”

To mark the occasion, a reception was held at the store located 100 Wilshire Blvd on Thursday evening, where Michael Cigliano, Executive Vice President at Santa Monica Seafood, said, “We’ve been in business since 1939 and look forward to being in business for another 84 years. It’s very important for us to protect our oceans and protect its resources. And that’s what we’ve always had an eye on, we need to restore balance to the sea.”

Overfishing of the world’s oceans was tragically inevitable, but the full scale of the problem only became common knowledge about 30 or so years ago. Atlantic cod have been nearly fished to extinction and while Atlantic halibut might not be listed as “endangered,” their numbers are still frighteningly low as bottom trawlers catch the sea floor-dwelling fish, destroying the young stock and thus preventing any replenishment of the population.

In 2016, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration listed bluefin tuna as “endangered” as the population was near historical lows. However, numbers have increased slightly since then.

The six week initiative is being broken down into three, different twice-rotating ASC-certified product promotions. From June 16-22 it is trout by Riverence Provisions and again from July 7-13, from June 23-29 it’s shrimp from Del Pacifico Seafoods and again July 14-20 and finally from June 30-July 6 it is salmon from Kvaroy Arctic and again from July 21-27.

“We’re here tonight really to raise awareness of how much this industry has transformed in recent years and also the companies behind that transformation,” said Eric Davis, from the Aquaculture Stewardship Council. According to Davis, over half of all seafood consumed around the world is now farmed.

“When you can’t feed the world on wild caught. You can’t. You need to have a sustainable protein for the growing global population. So you have to have aquaculture as part of the mix. But when aquaculture is growing, not all farm seafood is equal,” Davis said.

“We highlight numerous other initiatives, events, holidays, relationships, and food species throughout the entire year. While we spotlight responsible seafood year-round, we wanted to give a deeper emphasis over the next six weeks to highlight our partnership and the impact we are making together,” Roger O’Brien, President and CEO, Santa Monica Seafood said, adding, “This summer is the perfect time span to create a sense of timeliness and importance to the benefits of ASC-Certified seafood. We want our customers and the communities we serve to benefit from all the special activity we bring to our two retail stores.”

Among the mouthwatering, drool-inducing dishes that will be available there will will be, Del Pacifico shrimp ceviche aguachile (with red onion, cucumber and lime), Kvaroy Arctic salmon tartare (with capers, cilantro and wonton crisps), Riverence sautéed steelhead (with rosemary, thyme and crispy skin), Del Pacifico grilled shrimp skewer (with sweet chili lime sauce), Kvaroy Arctic glazed salmon (with white miso, scallions and sesame seeds) and Riverence pan roasted steelhead trout (with cauliflower puree and micro-basil).

Since 2010, ASC has been creating and enforcing the strictest standards for ensuring supply chain integrity from the farm to the store. Its “sea green” label only appears on seafood from farms that have been independently assessed and certified as environmentally and socially responsible. For more information visit us.asc-aqua.org/

SUMMER SONG

season ... just like Taylor Swift, as her Eras Tour continues.

Song for people who always live like it’s summer: “WHERE SHE GOES” by Bad Bunny

With a title like “WHERE SHE GOES,” it might seem like the Puerto Rican reggaetonero Bad Bunny was preparing to release a crossover hit recorded in English. But that’s not his style. Instead, Benito (as Bad Bunny is known in Spanish) is a master of his own business and nothing seems scary here. In another neighborhood, maybe. I think it won’t need security because so far it feels safe and it is not an issue here.”

Jim Bartz agreed.

“I don’t have a problem with that,” he said. “At this point I don’t feel unsafe. I think I would feel safer in Hollywood if they had that.”

Several people, both local and visitor, didn’t think the proposal would impact their decision to shop or visit DTSB but others questioned the optics of having armed individuals on patrol.

“I don’t feel unsafe,” said Spencer Haddad. “Going around Hollywood with the armed guards, I feel weird. In front of the sneaker shops, guys just in bulletproof vests, like is there a guy with a gun here? I don’t think it would make a difference. It might affect it a little bit. I feel like the presence of armed guards makes it a little different in a bad way. Makes you think there’s more theft, more crime.”

Los Angeles resident Laila Casillas also questioned the way she’d feel about visible guns.

“I don’t know, because I think guns in general make other people uncomfortable, so I would probably feel a little weird,” said Casillas.

Los Angeles resident Robert Cavaleria said safety is a concern for him but he didn’t think private security guards would make him feel any differently about the area. He said homelessness was the primary problem and he questioned if the officers would be able to do anything about it.

“This is my first time in a month or so I don’t know if anything has changed, I don’t think so,” he said. “I don’t see many homeless right now. So it looked like in the past there was more, so you have to watch your back.”

Though you’re physically full-grown, your heart continues to get bigger this year, as loving increases your capacity to love. More highlights: Savvy financial dealings will have you buying something you’ve long wanted. A professional advancement gives you new tools and there’s a happy ending to a family drama. Sagittarius and Capricorn adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 10, 4, 33, 18 and 12.

Aries (March 21-April 19). “Yes” is the sound that opens your world and flows your attention. People offer things you’re not the least bit interested in, and it’s stressful to decline. Instead of saying no, just say yes to something more agreeable to you.

Taurus (April 20-May 20). Your first idea may be your best, but you’ll never know if it’s the only one you consider. Come up with as many as you can. Even bad ones can lead to something. You’ll have people around you who are excellent sounding boards.

Gemini (May 21-June 21). The concept of social proof is meaningless to you today. No matter how many testimonials and endorsements are attached to the situation, you will do your own research and make an autonomous decision.

Cancer (June 22-July 22). You give your undivided attention, and your subject feels like they are the most important person in the world to you in that moment. This quality of attention is a rare commodity. Those who value it will give much to keep it coming.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22). Focusing on one small loss will make you frustrated. But that frustration will transform when you take into consideration all of the different kinds of losses people go through. You’re truly lucky.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). To play the game well, you must get to know the other players and familiarize yourself with their strengths, weaknesses and goals. You will have the opportunity to repair an alliance. Like most opportunities, this one requires some initiative.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22). Pretend there is no such thing as logic. What’s the feeling of an interaction? There are no right or wrong answers, only impressions that your sensitive, emotional body and imagination can pick up.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You feel tensions that others are trying to hide. They might be amazing actors, but your powers of perception run too deep to be fooled. With discretion and diplomacy, you’ll smooth over a rocky situation.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You’re thinking of the future and tackling things that most people don’t even realize are coming. Because you’re two steps ahead, people might not understand you just yet, but don’t worry. You’ll get in sync when you need to.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You will be discerning with your attention, recognizing clearly there is too much out there that doesn’t warrant or earn your focus. You’ll keep things moving along.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The difference between laziness and efficiency is intention. The end result will be the same either way. You’ll find a method of accomplishing tasks with reduced energy expenditure and time consumption, and you’ll be free for more engaging and pleasurable pursuits.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20). If you think something is impossible, it will be. That’s why you’re better off not knowing the odds of getting your big aim. The statistics can only tell you what’s happened before, not what will happen in your case.

Though you’re physically full-grown, your heart continues to get bigger this year, as loving increases your capacity to love. SANTA MONICA PIER 360 BEACH FESTIVAL
Santa Monica Pier 360 Beach Festival celebrates the best of beach life with an awesome, FREE, all-ages festival! With ocean sports competitions, Polynesian dancing, a one-of-a-kind surf and skate history museum, live music, food and drinks, interactive games, sampling by some of your favorite brands and so much more, Pier 360 is leading the efforts to reduce kitchen usage of plastic with a product that can be directly added to your compost pile. Your garbage is the most important part of your home when it comes to personally impacting the environment, something Jon can explain. Using compostable plastic products, which the UN recently called hugely important for fighting plastics pollution, is a big part of the solution. He’s a passionate and articulate advocate for the possibilities of widespread composting, and can talk about these serious topics in a way that’s hopeful and funny. He’s also got a remarkable personal story. He became obsessed with the idea that there was a better, more environmentally friendly way to make plastics. And that’s the mission he’s still on today! 3 – 7 p.m., 11666 National Blvd, Los Angeles. Event repeats at the Venice Whole Foods, 225 Lincoln Blvd on Tuesday, June 27.

Libraries Of The Future

At Santa Monica College, we’re working to build the libraries of the future—physical and virtual spaces that support visitors as they explore, discover and create. Infused with modern technology and a diverse, welcoming staff, these libraries will be structured to meet the diverse needs of all students and the challenges of the future.
