Late President of the Hlabama Polytechnic Institute

this volume is dedicated as a token of respect for his attainments as a scholar and as a scientist, as a grateful acknowledgment of the debt which the whole college owes to his wise guidance and stimulating leadership, and as a mark of the personal affection of his old pupils, who found in him not only an inspiring teacher but also a kind and patient friend.

A History of the Class of 1903 A

N beginning this difficult but pleasant task, it is far from my intention to selfishly display to the public at large any extraordinary accomplishments or attainments which the average Senior classman claims to possess. But as this opportunity presents itself only once in a lifetime, I trust that a brief account of the history of our short career will not reflect dishonor upon what we have intended to be a spotless record. And if we have in any manner fallen short of our high ideal, we beg that our shortcomings may be overlooked and only our good intentions accepted with a double measure of approval.

Our class is now at the zenith of its glory. It is with no feeling of reluctance that we take a backward glance at the days when we were verdant Freshmen, and some, perhaps, Sub-Freshman, nor do we "scorn the base degrees by which we did ascend."

These thoughts lead one to think of a time beyond that state of verdancy, and of occurrences that linger only in the memory now. Or perhaps, one is reminded of a pleasant September day or night when first he alighted from the train at the village station. How changed were scenes like these from those he had left behind only a few hours before! What a hurrying to and fro; such a crowd and such a noise as would characterize a city many times larger than this one proved to be.

Some, perhaps, who were so unfortunate as to be alone, were no doubt disappointed when they arrived at the station, in that the president did not turn out to meet such distinguished personages as themselves, which of course they expected him to do. However, I will say by way of explanation, that he had a fairly good number of representatives there who performed the duties of his high office in a most agreeable manner—to themselves—and many other duties did they perform, which the president, himself, I dare say, would have neglected,

Having been given so cordial a reception to begin with, many selected rooms at private boarding houses;

those who did not, betook themselves to the most expensive and up-to-date hotel in the city, where, in either case, they would taste a sample of the luxuries in store for them during four long years in the future, and where they had hoped to spend the night unmolested, dreaming dreams of a hallowed past and a glorious future, which in a few days would prove not to be a dream at all but a stern reality.

The next day we proceeded to the president's office, where we were carried through the mysteries of matriculation, in which we signed our names in a large book and exchanged for the treasurer's signature the necessary coin to cover damages for wear and tear and other incidentals. From here we were sent to the various professors to be examined and classified. This ordeal being past and we being convinced of our too limited knowledge, were glad, indeed, to bear the title of Freshman. During our first few days in college we were often approached by supposed officers and other military looking personages, who kindly directed us to Dr. Bell's emporium (?) where we could purchase books, a uniform, and other paraphernalia necessary for the comfort of a cadet.

But those days soon passed, as did the remainder of our Freshman year, without other serious difficulties or misfortunes, except some of our class decided to stay away the next year, and a few, perhaps, were invited to stay away on account of the student's relation to the faculty not being as congenial as that reverend assembly could desire. One year of our college life had run its course and we felt that it had been profitably spent. We had never shirked a duty—without a number of demerits being placed upon the debit side of our account with the commandant. What a pride we had felt in answering "here" when the sergeant called our name; and the willingness with which we obeyed the command "green squad fall out," clearly displayed how great a reverence we had for the military.

And now we have reached the first milestone on our journey—the Sophomore year. At the beginning of the session there enlisted in our ranks a large number of raw recruits who stepped into the places made vacant by withdrawals during the previous year. By far the most important day in the Sophomore year is the one on which every ambitious "Soph" clearly sees—in his own imagination—two yellow stripes upon each sleeve, which sparkle in the sun and which conspicuously point him out as being a corporal But many of these ambitious ones were destined to have their hopes shattered like the withered leaves of winter. For of the large number who desired a corporalship, as is usually the case, seventeen were appointed and the rest were disappointed. The disappointed, however did not bow their heads in shame but consoled themselves in the fact that "there would come a time some day," when the colonel would realize how great a mistake he had made in not appointing them, and perhaps in the Junior year, if they were ever so fortunate as to reach that exalted state, they would don three yellow stripes instead of two; and the next year they would wear a pair of golden bars and the dream of their youth would at last be realized. This was a year that tried our patience to the utmost. We met all the trouble we were looking for in the form of O, D's., recitations, drill, etc., including the fact that there is always open a channel through which the errors of the under-classmen reach a book in the commandant's office. Not mentioning other difficulties which we had to meet, I will say that most of the class of 1903 honorably overcame them all, and arrived triumphantly at the second milestone on our journey, the Junior year.

At the beginning of the Junior year, there joined us quite a number of new men, who, though they did not share in the appointments and disappointments of the previous years, have proven to be loyal and worthy members of the class of 1903. This was the year in which the individual members betook themselves to the particular course of study they wished to pursue in after years.

During the year the college was honored by a visit from the famous Ogden party, who visited the chief colleges in the South in the interest of better education

The student body was honored by a complimentary trip over the Western Railway to Montgomery, through the kindness of the officials of the road.

The 'Varsity football team, though not as successful as in previous years, acquitted itself nobly upon the gridiron, defeating several of our old opponents and displaying that same tenacity of purpose that has made Auburn's football team famous in the past.

In the Junior year our class was put upon the honor system in which each member was pledged against cheating on examinations throughout his college career.

Although our Junior year proved to be a decided success in many respects, nevertheless, it was accompanied by misfortunes and bereavements which necessarily must come whether we want them or not.

On January 23, 1902, there occurred an irreparable loss to both the student body, the college and the State, without mention of which our history would be incomplete. I refer to the death of our late president, Dr. Wm. Le-Roy Broun, a name which is dear to the hearts of many alumni, and to hundreds of students who have gone out from this institution into the various walks of life. He was truly the student's friend and counselor. No fitter mounment could be erected to his memory than these numerous buildings, which stand a living monument before the eyes of all observers.

The remainder of our Junior year swiftly passed and "03" began to see the beginning of the end.

In the Senior year the majority of our class returned to continue the march toward that coveted goal for which we had spent three years of ceasless effort.

In the Freshman year our class was composed of 102 members; in the Sophomore year 75; in the Junior year 62; in the Senior year 46. You may notice that these figures are arranged in the order of a decreasing series, and also that the decrease is directly proportional to the number of final examinations that we have stood. But we beg that you will not look at it in this light, but take it as a shining example of that inexorable law of nature, "the survival of the fittest."

From the record of our past you may thus see that our path has not been strewn with roses altogether, but, in their stead, difficulties and trials which every college class must of necessity meet and overcome.

From time to time our ranks have been thinned by term examinations and other examinations which need not be mentioned here. But the majority have fought a good fight and performed their duties faithfully to the end. The class of 1903 has proven to be a loyal band of fellow workers, laboring for a common purpose. They have long since realized that "in unity there is strength," and consequently when any question came up that pertained to the honor and good standing of the class, all have voted as a single unit.

Now our Senior year has nearly past and we are soon to face the future with all its allurements and possibilities. The time will soon arrive when our college days will have ended, and the class of 1903 will go out from the shelter of these classic halls to take upon themselves the higher and nobler duties of citizenship; and we trust that each may bear the standard of his profession wisely and bravely as becomes a son and alumnus of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

No doubt the coming years will bring serious changes which the veil of the future hides from us now; and some will take up their abode in places far removed from this; but whatever these changes may be, and wherever fate is kind enough to place us, the memory of our college days will still be as fragrant and refreshing as a summer's breeze.

Whatever the future may have in store for the members of the class of 1903, time alone can tell. And of their achievements and accomplishments in the days to come, I can not hope to say, but leave them for your kind consideration and the judgment of a future historian.

T. A. CADDELL, Historian.

semior Class Prophecy ses

HAVE heard that many of the futures foretold by my predecessors in the line of class-prophets were false and few have really come to pass. But the predictions that I make shall be true, for I will not be a false prophet.

If seeing is believing, then believe me; for what I relate, that I have seen.

While arguing with an under-classman, a few days ago, the dispute became so heated that we came to blows and I was knocked into the middle of the next decade.

While in this condition, my mind wandered to the four corners of the globe. Thus wandering I came in contact with an aerial ship manned by four men, whom I recognized to be my classmates, Hiden, Mitchell, Pierce and Bize. These aeronauts were returning from a voyage to the moon. They informed me that Hiden, Pierce and Yonge had invented the mechanism, and Mitchell had discovered the gas which inflated the balloon. Dr. Bize accompanied them to be present in case his medical attention should be necessary. When I asked where Yonge was, I was informed that he had fallen in love with the daughter of the man in the moon and had remained under the condition that they return for him the following year.

This lucky meeting filled me with such a longing for a sight of old Auburn boys that I made up my mind not to rest until I had found all my classmates for 1903.

On account of an accident we were compelled to hastily descend and found ourselves in the midst of a great city. We were immediately accosted by a great, gruff policeman, who ordered us to move on and clear the way. This policeman was none other than Paterson, who, when he recognized us, became more civil and agreed to aid me in my search. He delighted me by telling me that Mims could be quickly found, and then shocked me by saying that he could be so easily spotted, only because he was in prison. Of course I wanted to comfort Mims in his distress and on our way to his cell Paterson told me in strictest confidence, the history of Mims' fall. They had been in the business of horse-swapping and veterinary surgery together. The firm had heen accused of trading horses under false pretences. Mims had been sent up for life, but Pat had turned State's evidence and had been given a place on the force.

To add to my sorrow, I here saw, clothed in Orange and Blue stripes, Culver, the widely known and ingenious counterfeiter.

The sad scene was too much for me, so I moved on to seek for more fortunate friends. Among the many signs that met my gaze as I passed down the street was one which read as follows: "Dr. Foster, the World Renowned and Far-Famed Hypnotist." "Instructions at reasonable rates. Subjects desired. ONLY SMALL NEGROES NEED APPLY."

Beyond this was another, "Dancing Lessons Free, Prof. Shuptrine." Being desirous of attaining this grace-ful accomplishment, I entered and asked for particulars. But upon recognizing me as a classmate, he shook his head slowly and sadly, and told me that he had long since ceased trying to teach Auburn men to dance. Though he had made many attempts he had never yet succeeded.

In extraordinarily large letters which nearly covered the sign-board and which almost totally obscured the signs was the name of their painter, D. Chipley.

To my great joy Pat informed me that he knew where he could find a whole nest of our classmates. He said that Schmidt's Great Show was in town and that Hans had succeeded in rounding up a most remarkable collection of freaks fron the class of 1903. Hans himself was clown, Tommie Morgan did stunts on the tight rope and trapeze and "Parabola" Martin proved the impossibility of his being unseated by any bucking Bronco, when once his feet were locked beneath his steed.

On a raised platform I recognized Avery, majestically waving his baton before his band. Rat had now reached the head of his profession, long since having displaced Sousa.

Of course we remained to see the after show. Here the musical numbers were rendered by our old friend. Joe Knight, and just here Paterson took occasion to tell me that L. Earle Thornton, the funniest man in the world had formerly assisted Joe in this performance, but that now he was starring alone, having deserted Joe because the latter had refused to sing at night for fear of injuring his voice, and because Joe for fear of diminishing the profits had insisted on charging full admission for children and babies. Ed. Taylor having been employed by Thornton to laugh at his jokes, lost his job when this dispute occurred.

In front of one of the side-shows, painted in glaring colors was the following: "The greatest freak in Amerca, the man who sticks Pins and Knives in his body and feels no pain." I discovered that this was my beloved Captain H. E. Davis who informed me that he had acquired this great feat by sticking himself every time he violated one of the college regulations. He seemed to be "badly disfigured but still in the ring."

In this same side-show was a man who continually trotted in a small circle. I asked Davis the significance of this performance and to my astonishment he said that it was Percy Marshall following his nose.

After the performance, Manager Schmidt cordially greeted us and expressed his regrets that he was not able to furnish us with complimentary tickets for the evening performance, but this was impossible as Joe Knight had insisted in his contract that no complimentary tickets be given.

When Schmidt heard of my desire to see my classmates he immediately began to tell me of those whom he had come across.

It was with great regret that I heard of Dinsmore's misfortune. Soon after his graduation, he fell in love with a maiden to whom he was wedded. They lived happily with his mother-in-law for several years. On account of his extravagance and laziness, he soon spent all of his dear wife's dear mother's dear fortune, and positively refused to work. The good dame advised him to take a trip to the other side of the world and stop in the center if he so desired. He took her advice and went into the hobo business, carrying his earthly stock of goods in a tin can.

Schmidt pointed out, in passing, a handsome dwelling, which he said was the home of Watson Davis. Watson was the owner of the majority of the cotton mills in the South, and did nothing but hunt deer and take voyages in the Southern seas. When he was at home he lived in luxury and ease and was so much at leisure that he allowed both sides of his anatomy to sleep at once. The strictest rule of his household was that no alarm clock should ever be brought within its doors.

Of all the news that Hans gave me the best was from old Auburn. As Commandant of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute was W. P. Pruitt, the famous Tactician, who had revised the United States Drill Regulations. He had revolutionized the Military discipline at Auburn, and the cadets inspired by the memory of their Commandant's record in college, attended every drill and roll call.

Here also was Dr. Stokes the famous electrician, the second Edison. He had proved that perpetual motion was not an impossibility.

Just beyond the residence of Davis we met at the head of the Salvation army, J. D. Walker, singing praises at the top of his voice, while Pat Rembert hammered on the great bass drum. The mob halted where we stood and Walker announced to the assembled crowd that brother Haynie would give his religious experience, and the recital brought tears to the eyes of all the listeners. I heard a voice in the rear of the crowd exclaim "Amen" and I saw Marsh pushing his way to the speaker.

When the religious band had moved off, making more noise than a crowd of cadets at a football game, I saw Schmidt making his way down a small alley toward the basement of a large building. I hastily followed him and we entered a subterranean cell and found enclosed in a dense smoke Taber and Hazard. Taber the poet, Hazard the philosopher. Taber was writing a love ditty, while Hazard was composing the second volume of his philosophical treatise. In this masterpiece, Hazard devoted one volume to the proof that St. Paul copied from Shakespeare the following passage: "O Death, where is thy sting? O Grave, where is thy victory?" Between vigorous puffs from the "Old Boy" Taber managed to tell me of Freeman's and Bagby's success. Freeman had become a politician and had been sent to Congress and might be seen there with his hair on end, his whole body in continual motion while from time to time he drew from his pocket his documentary proofs and shook them threateningly in the faces of his terrified colleagues. Bagby had become a great lawyer and statesman and on account of his soberness was on the supreme bench.

In order that he might not lose a single puff, Taber handed me a daily paper in which I read that Gen. R. P. Burke had won a great battle in some distant land. I found that Burke had been disappointed in a love affair and had been on the verge of suicide, when he took refuge in the army as a corporal. On account of his military bearing and commanding voice, he gradually rose to the eminent height which to-day would be coveted by Sampson, Schley, Patrick, or Dewey.

I noticed that the name of the editor of this paper was W. W. Hill. Here Hazard emerged from his books and volunteered the startling information, that Kauffman and Searcy, having fallen from grace, were running a blind tiger in a prohibition town. Kauffman had killed two men and was considered a very dangerous character, and Searcy had been driven from his former home for continually inflicting orations upon his fellow citizens.

As we could not induce these literary characters into further conversation we silently departed and made our way to a great assembly hall, where in the presence of many thousands of people, we listened to the long discourses of the Reverend Hard-Shell Baptist Evangelists, Paul Rigney and J. C. Smith They had already converted half the American people to their belief. Smith had found the electrical work too hard. Rigney had sent six men to Heaven by filling prescriptions and determined to send some more by propounding the tough shell Baptist creed to the world at large. They never preached at the same place twice, for they did not like to repeat their sermon.

George Blois Hill by his sonorous doice and the feeling with which he sang his favorite song, "Come show me the way to go home" brought many mourners to grasp the paw of these divines.

At the door of this hall, surrounded by a great mob, stood Blackwell, "the observed of all observers, the glass of fashion, the mould of form." He was selling photographs of himself. I tried to get one but on account of the crowd was unable to reach him.

I left this city and continued my search. As I was going through a backwoods village twenty miles from the nearest railroad, I saw whittling on a box the inseparable drug mixers, Horn and Randle, the proprietors of a half-horse concern, a cross between a drug store and a grog shop. We took turn about telling jokes and enjoyed the day very much, having been disturbed by but one customer, who was an antiquated self-satisfied sister and who bought a half-dozen boxes of Dr. Caddell's great discovery, a positive cure for old age.

Randle told me that Chase had lost his life by going over the Niagara Falls in a barrel.

Horn said that Filo Turner had been there the day before, displaying his fine quality of complexion powder for which he was agent and a living advertisement.

A few miles from this village, weilding the hickory rod, Prof. Robertson taught his pupils the rule of three and the Blue Back spelling book

In a neighboring village I came across Lieut. Rutland, justice of the peace and assistant Notary Public. Rutland pointed out to me a man who was asleep under a great oak and said that this was Clifford Rutledge. After abusing Rutledge with my fist and pulling him by the ears I succeeded in waking him, and drew from him a story about himself that was very much like the legend of Rip Van Winkle. In my conversation with him I had to wake him six times in two minutes.

I left him asleep with a cough drop in his mouth.

On the side of a great mountain, in the midst of a forest stood a little cabin, surrounded by a ten acre field. In the back yard of this secluded place, eight red-haired children were making mud pies. Before the house in a split bottomed chair leaned my old friend Troutman. There was a great scarcity of hair on his head. His shoes were of the rough brogan type, through which his greattoes protruded. His better half (she seemed to be his better half indeed, for she was twice as large as he, and red-headed to boot) was raising a racket, which resounded in the valley like the voice of a raving hyena. I wanted to talk with Troutman but thinking it best to keep at a safe distance from such dangerous quarters, I continued to migrate.

Inscribed on the headstone of an isolated grave in a country church yard was the following inscription:-

"THOMAS JOSEPH DOWDELL
"He lies beneath the earth he thought his own
And now God rules the universe alone."

These, then, are my comrades as I saw them through my glimpse into the future. But with these alone our roll is not complete. Two places are still vacant, two names are yet uncalled, names of those whose record has been our model, whose presence has been a pleasure and inspiration, and whose faces shall ever be in our memory. But these names have been omitted through no carlessness, but with intention. For, if the present be any criterion of that which is to come, then some tongue more eloquent than mine is needed to tell the future of Miss Ordway and Miss Harwell, the Co-eds of 1903.

W. LAWSON THORNTON,

Prophet of the Class of 1903.

& & & Class Poem & & &

S poet of the Class of Nineteen-three,
I feel unworthy of the place I hold;
For Virgil might be honored here to-day,
To sing with silver tongue in accents bold,
The future hopes and merits of this Class

My rusty harp, ill strung, and out of tune, Festooned with cobwebs, hung upon the wall, Till called to sing a song for nineteen-three. Then did I envy most those bards of yore, Who moved men's hearts and e'en the trees and stones; Then did I coax and bribe and tease my Muse, And vex Erato begging for her lyre. Till soft as the echo of an angel's song, A clear sweet voice fell gently on my ear: I listened; whence it came I could not tell. It bade me write and this is what it said. This Class is like a stream of many streams Which flows from all the country round about To join each other in a common cause And enter in a race towards the sea. Each member is a little brook, which pays

Its tribute to the greater stream, and in Return is aided in its progress by The whole; and all flow on in company. Some left their little mountain homes and worked With slow impeded flow their winding ways,— Through marshes, under logs, and over stones, Half clogged, at times with briars overgrown. While others coming on with ample flood, The way already cleared, rushed strongly on, And laughed among their rapids and their falls. Still other brooks that flowed into the stream, And came from various parts with measured flood, Pursued their quiet uneventful course And joined the rest without one merry sparkle. But those are the days of Ratdom past and gone, Those days when we with counterfeited glee Gave many a song and dance, perhaps our first; Songs sung with borrowed and ill fitting tunes, And dances where new steps were oft invented. Again to the Seniors' taste we fixed our rooms, And played Narcissus with a wry faced mirror, And set our shoes at an angle of sixty degrees, And, blindfolded, fed each other with molasses.

Since then full many a sturdy stroke we've made To reach that goal which is in every eye. Each day that's past we've tried to leave behind A higher mark upon the wall of Time. How oft have we while poring o'er our books, The leaden hours dragging slowly by, Seen Darkness give his place to rosy Dawn, And the red Sun rise to take charge of the Day. Oft have we seen that Keeper of the Day Receive his keys from Darkness, his black slave, Who follows him around from place to place And watches over him whene'er he sleeps. And often when that slave was tired down, We bade him sleep, and watched there in his stead. Such deeds as this made Darkness our friend, And when we thought of pranks and midnight joke, As making noise and bothering other folks, And gathered round to hear his good advice, He always had some stirring tale to tell Of Auburn's past. But be this as it may, A boy's a boy and sometimes goes astray. A boy without a joke's not worth a snap. And now—but what is now? I fear to say. 'Tis but the zero point in counting time.

It is a mill, and each of us a miller, Each miller stationed on the road of Life To grind but once his Future into Past. Again, it is the triumphal arch of Time-A doorway with magnificent sculpture decked, Twixt past eternity and eternity to come. And as we stand and look one way we see Our past. This well we know. We made it. But when we turn and look the other way 'Tis dark but for the many stars—our hopes— Which, of all times, are shining brightest now. Then raise the dear old Orange and the Blue; Then raise on high the Orange and the Black; Weave them into the many ties that bind Us to each other, as links of steel,— That bind us to this College and this Town. Despite these ties the day is not far off When we like seed slung from the sower's hand Shall scatter, and each take a different way. In Christian or in Pagan lands, On Ocean's waves, on Desert's sands, On Mountain's peak, or 'mongst his crags, In Valleys deep where Autumn lags As the it knew not Winter'd half gone by, In this wide happy world where e'er you go, Let Auburn ever in your memory be.

A Fistory of the Class of 1904 A A

HE history of the Class of 1904, which I am endeavoring to write, began in the fall of 1900, when with mildly beating hearts we heard the train conductor shout—"Auburn—don't forget your packages." With these words ringing in our ears we stepped off the train and a sight greeted our eyes that was enough to strike terror to the heart of a veteran Indian fighter, for we were in a crowd of demons, I thought, as they were yelling like a band of Comanches and at almost regular intervals was heard the rattle of the paddle, as it was plied with unrelenting hand, by those who had been "rats" themselves. After this little preliminary, of course the other usual punishments were inflicted. The Senior inspection, while a little removed from the noiseless tenor of every day life, had a lasting effect upon our military bearing as was shown by the number getting corporals in our Sophomore year.

After we were fully "busted," using the vouchers term, we began to see the solemn obligation we were sent here to fulfill, and decided it was best to settle down and do our best.

Our Freshman Class Football Team didn't accomplish the impossible by winning the championship, but showed where there was some mighty fine material which only needed to be coached a little to bring it out, and a glance at the line-ups of the 'Varsity Eleven for the last two years will show this to be true.

Of course we could not remain Freshman always, even if some of us did show a tendency to do so. The Faculty here entered a very serious objection and with their words, "Learn or leave" in our ears most of us decided it was best to learn, although some few will always act contrary. It was unanimously decided by the Faculty that it was best for these to leave, thereby making room for others of a more studious nature.

We started our Sophomore year with a great many of our last year's class, and also a number of fine new men. As usual the first talk was of the corporal examination, who was going to get in the first five? This was the question asked by many, while others ventured guesses as to the make-up of the 'Varsity. In the roll for Corporal appointments, the Sophomores were right there at the finish with seventeen men, and besides these there were several others in the roll, but owing to the fact that only seventeen could be used, these had to be disappointed. On the football field we were represented by men of ability, such as Allison and McAdory, and these two men showed them how football ought to be played and gained for themselves a name never to be forgotten.

About this time the honor system was first started in our College and 1904 had a pledge drawn up and signed by every member, this pledge was submitted to the Faculty, but they decided we were too young a class to be taking such a serious step, and thought that we had better wait at least a year.

Class football again engaged our attention, and with the addition of a few new men to our last years' team, we were able to put out a winner; this was accomplished through the untiring efforts of Captain Lay and Manager Allison; to these two men belong the credit of taking on to the field, the champions of 1902.

In baseball we were principally represented by Sorrell, the renowned "Slab Artist," and with him to do the twirling, Auburn would have had a winning team, but, unfortunately there was no one to do the back-stop work, hence his pitching went for naught. Our other men showed that they knew a point or two about the game, but were rather weak with the "stick."

September, 1902 found us Juniors, and with this title, we started in to make a name for the Class of 1904. The first thing of importance that we did was to put about ten men in the 'Varsity football squad; these were no doubt men of ability, as was seen by the kind of ball they played, and a Junior was temporarily elected to fill the place of captain which was made vacant by the inability of 'Preacher' Parks of 1902 to be with us.

Not only have we excelled in football, but, we have by hard study raised the curriculum of our class at least three months.

Success at last crowned our efforts to establish the honor system in our class, and so far it has worked to perfection; there is not a Junior in the whole class who is not glad that he signed it. The privileges it gives us is enough inducement to cause the other under-classes to adopt it.

I must now pass on to a part of our history that is the pride of every Junior, and that is the showing we made in class football. This year we matched against teams that were well on to the game, and could do stunts with the "pig-skin" themselves, and a glance at the scores will show that we gained championship only after some very hard playing.

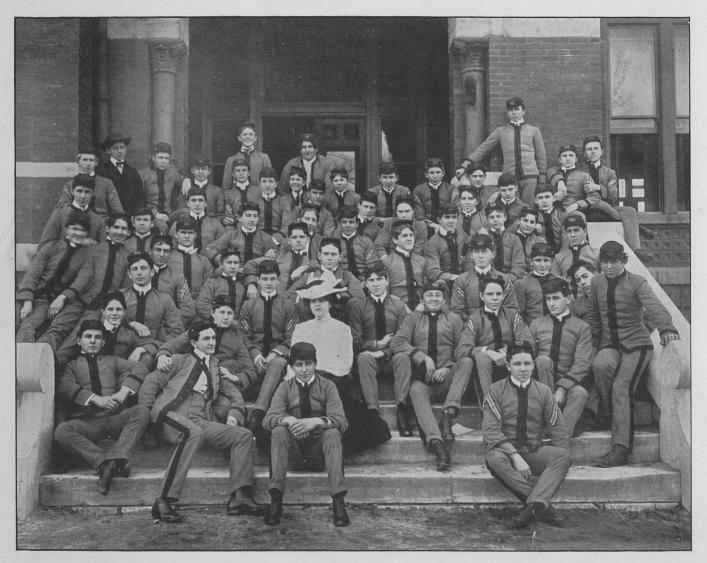

Our men were under control of two men I have mentioned before in connection with our Class football. These two men are Lay and Allison; with their strict guidance and watching we put forth a champion team for the second time.

It is impossible for me to dwell on one subject forever, even though it is pleasant to tell about, and as I don't want to increase the cost of the GLOMERATA by utilizing too much space, I think it is about time to say a little about our men who are trying for the baseball team. We have some fine players trying for places on the team, and it seems to be the general opinion of the careful observers that they will push other candidates very hard.

Before closing I would like to say a few words about the "Pork Trust" formed by several members of our class, for the purpose of making frequent sallies among the fair, these men are known by the murderous gleam in their eyes; they can often be seen at their "rendezvous on the boulevard."

I have so far enumerated the several events that have made us a history and closing say that I hope 1904 will be as successful in future as she has been in the past.

s s s Fistory of 1905 s s s

S historian of the class '05, I find staring me in the face a task, which however pleasant it may seem, has its difficulties, known only to those who have undertaken a similar one.

During the two years of our college life, which soon will have passed into history, many changes have been wrought in the College and in our lives.

We began our college career on the 10th day of September, 1901, and 83 wise heads we were, at least in our own estimation.

Of course we had to go through with the regular form of amusement for the upper-classmen as all former "rats" had to do. Many of us slept in the woods or on tops of houses, while others walked post, on the night of Senior inspection.

In athletics we made a fairly good showing for a Freshman class, although the Seniors beat us out by a score of 36 to 0 in football, we showed grit and the "do or die" spirit throughout the game. We had good material for football, and what we lacked was training and experience. Elmer was chosen captain of the team and whenever the 230 pounder would hit the Senior line, it would always yield a good gain. However we didn't get in many of these bucks, because we were on the defensive practically throughout the entire struggle. Webb, J. S. was another "coocoo," and afterwards became famous for his punting and drop-kicking. Seale played steady ball, and also did Nettles, the then brawny sub-freshman. The truth of the whole is that we were simply out-classed.

As to baseball, I think it will be safe to say that we had by far the best team in college, although the Sophs did beat us out.

During this year we lost one of our classmates, by name E. L. Wright, who died of pneumonia on Thanks-giving night. He was a good student and highly esteemed by all who knew him.

We, the College, and the entire South were afflicted this year by the sudden and sad death of our beloved President, Dr. Wm. Leroy Broun.

Dr. Broun was a graduate of the University of Virginia and one of the most scholarly educators of the country.

On Field day we carried off a few firsts, Cawthon winning the running broad jump, Denegre winning the quarter mile race and Elmer pushing Jerry Guinn, the big, muscular Senior for the shot pelt.

Passing to commencement we gave a very enjoyable dance to all who attended.

Summer vacation over, 48 of the former members of the class returned, not to enter as "nutty" Freshmen, but to enter the class of the two-striped insignia. After we had had our share of "dosing" "rats" we, as well as everybody, began to look forward to the promotion of corporals. This seemed to stir the old boys up, as they lugged thick paddes to every evening roll call. Finally their day came and their wants were satisfied, and perhaps some of us were a little too well pleased with the warm reception that they gave us. This was the year of the first 18th corporal who was the Hon. L. G. Cobb. The eighteen lucky fellows could hardly await the coming of the stripes, and when they did come they thought that they were the "real thing."

We furnished the 'Varsity with two of her best football players. Although Seale didn't make the team this year, he will make somebody get up a hustle for a place next season.

To us belongs the distinction of having one of the most popular and attractive co-eds of the College. Miss May Harvey joined us this year and immediately won a place of respect and admiration among us by the excellency of her scholarship and pleasant smiles.

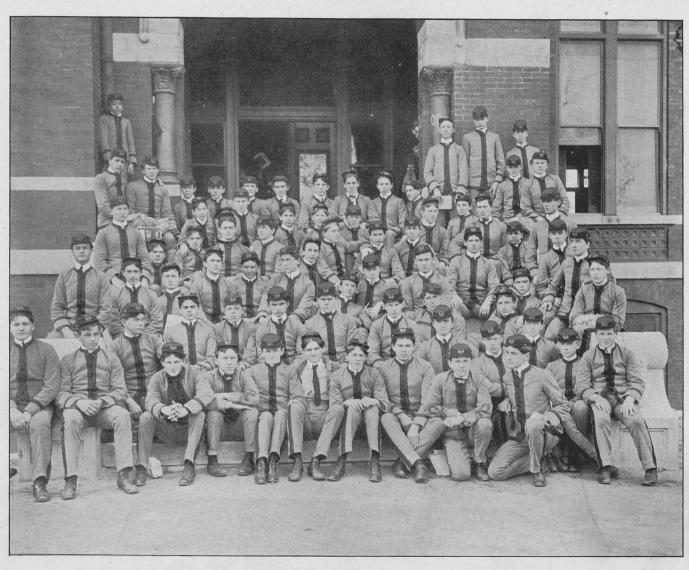

After Xmas holidays were over we returned to be strengthened by a number of new "rats."

Foy was chosen to captain our football team this year. We were not run over this time as badly as we were last year, although we had to go up against the champion Juniors. They won by a score of 11 to 2, which was not near so big as they had anticipated rolling up against us. We practiced against the Seniors, while the Juniors practiced against the Freshmen. The Juniors were in much better physical condition than we were, and were therefore able to play faster ball. In this game Reynolds, "the rat," distinguished himself and won a home among the Sophs. He is a very fast extra and sometimes would catch the play before it had made any headway. Daly, the plucky little end also played star ball, throwing the Junior backs for losses, while they rarely ever made any gains over him. Seale played 'Varsity ball as is his usual style of playing, also did Perkins play a beautiful quarter, while no fault could be found in any of the other men. Taking it as a whole we played together better than anybody on the sideline expected and by doing this greatly surprised them.

As to baseball this season, we have several candidates for 'Varsity and hope to be represented there. We have several good athletes on the Track team, and when Field day rolls around once more we will without a doubt carry off a good many first places.

Judging the future by the past I feel confident that '05' will continue to develop and do credit to itself and the College in all branches of physical and mental training.

🗻 🧈 history Freshman Class 🗻 🗻

T was the eleventh day of September, 1902, when we Freshmen, about ninety in number, gathered at Auburn to try college life.

It was a day of unsurpassed loveliness. Seldom, if ever, has the unclouded sun shone upon as many scared Freshman at Auburn.

I believe the old boys were glad to see us, anyway, they gave us a warm reception. We did not like to be so familiar at first, but the old boys thought it best. They came to see us every night for a week; and the rattling of paddles and the cry of "Rats" sound unpleasant to us now.

In a few days initiation and matriculation were over and some of us were sent to "Prof. Bell" to get our books assigned. We had been here but a week when we were surprised to know that some had an excess of demerits. This meant that some of us would have to walk the "Q." At the call of the commandant large numbers would rally around the Officer of the Day to assist in this important duty; and it must be said of the Freshman class that no class has ever exhibited so much zeal in guarding the campus, during the time when attacks seemed so much dreaded as we did (from two to four Saturday evening). Our uniforms came like balm to our wounded feelings. None but those who have worn a college uniform can know what a feeling of pride comes over a Freshman when he first puts it on. In short "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Our first examinations were over and we gathered around the bulletin-board to see if our names were "written there." Some were not, however, and this caused us to loose some of our classmates.

On February the seventh the Freshman Football Team met the Seniors, who won by a score of 11 to 5. Of course we didn't mind surrendering our atheletic honor to a higher class.

There is no great honor to be won in the Freshman class, but we must prepare ourselves for higher honors later.

Our first year is almost over, marked by the various examinations we have passed, the last of which is soon to come, and then we soon will leave the Freshman class to our worthy successors and become full fledged Sophomores.

E. C. SMITH, Historian.

& & Dr. Um. LeRoy Broun & & &

Dr. Wm. Leroy Broun died at Auburn, Ala., Jan. 23, 1902. In the death of Dr. Broun the cause of education throughout the State and South has suffered an incalculable loss. He was indeed one of the foremost educators of the country, and during his educational career of half a century, was associated with the most eminent men of his profession throughout the South, gaining their sincerest admiration as a man, and their highest esteem and respect as a scientist, educator and college executive.

He was a formative influence in such institutions as the University of Georgia, Vanderbilt University, the University of Texas, and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Dr. Broun was born in 1829, in Loudoun County, Va., and he represented the best traditions of scholarship and culture of that great seat of learning. Dr. Broun began his eminent educational career in 1853 as professor in a Mississippi college. Later he was professor of Mathematics in the University of Georgia. In 1856 he established Bloomfield Academy, one of the most successful and famous of the classical schools of Virginia. In 1861, at the call of his State, Dr. Broun hastened to the front. His high scientific and mathematical ability soon made him an authority in ordnance and artillery, and he was placed in charge of the arsenal at Richmond, superintending the manufacture of guns and all the munitions of war of the Confederacy. He rose to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and was, perhaps, the most thoroughly equipped technical and scientific officer in the Confederate service, being held in highest esteem by Gen. Lee and Gen. Gorgas, his chief in the Ordnance Department. It was while engaged in this scientific work that he first realized the fatal deficiency of Southern youth, and Southern education in regard to technical and industrial training. After the war he was elected to the chair of Mathematics in the University of Georgia, and by Henry W. Grady, W. B. Hill, the present cultured Chancellor of the University of Georgia, and a host of distinguished sons of Georgia, Dr. Broun was regarded with marked esteem, and his memory is to-day tenderly cherished throughout the commonwealth.

At the founding of the Vanderbilt University, Dr. Broun, with a corps of other eminent educators, was called to organize its course of studies, and to define its plans and policies. Later with such leaders as Mallet, of the University of Virginia, Humphreys of Vanderbilt, Tallichet, of Sewanee, he performed the same great task for the University of Texas. Of this distinguished faculty, Dr. Broun served as chairman.

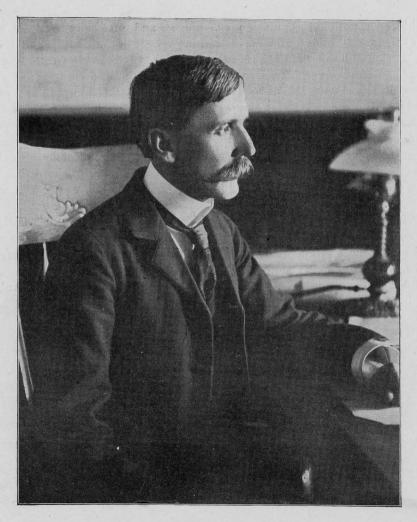

In 1882, Dr. Broun was called to the Presidency of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and here after the age of fifty years, he achieved a national reputation as a pioneer and master in scientific and technical education. Dr. Broun established in this Institute the first manual training school in the South, and the first laboratory of any significance in biology, electricity and mechanics. He also introduced into our institutions of higher learning in the State the principle of co-education. As a scholar, Dr. Broun was thorough and accurate; at once broad and profound; sensitive to all the delicate charms of culture, yet robust and independent, bold to plan and sagacious to execute.

He was splendidly equipped as a lecturer and teacher, and by his keen analysis, his discriminating accuracy, his scorn of intellectual sham and pretense, his unswerving devotion to truth, exerted a vigorous, strengthening influence in the intellectual life of thousands of young men throughout the South. Dr. Broun was a public spirited citizen, and took the liveliest interest in all the great questions and movements in civic life at home and abroad. He was, above all, a devout Christian. Free from cant and any touch of pharisaism, he inculcated in his students the highest principles and the noblest ideas. His Saturday morning lectures to the young men were full of spiritual uplift.

In many phases of his intellectual equipment and of his general attitude toward discipline, and college life at large, Dr. Broun resembled, to a marked degree, that most distinguished of English teachers, the great Arnold of Rugby. He was himself one of our greatest teachers, in sympathetic touch with every agency that makes for the betterment of the social and spiritual life of the people.

Auburn enjoyed a rare privilege in feeling the influence of this great mind, and Auburn should cherish the memory of his name and his fame.

PRES. C. C. THACH

* * * Prof. C. C. Chach * * *

Prof. Thach is an Alabamian, an Alumnus of the Institute over which he presides and in his many years of service has devoted his best efforts to the advancement and progress of the school. He is young, active, progressive and resourceful and having been closely associated with the lamented Dr. Broun in the management of the Institute and had much to do with the details, he is well equipped and thoroughly qualified for the discharge of the duties of the high position to which he has been called.

He is full of pride and love for his State, is alive to the spirit of the age, and under his guidance the Polytechnic Institute will take no backward step, but march bravely onward, leading the front ranks of the institutions of the South.

The election of Prof. Thach last June was then thought to be a wise one and the success of his first year's administration confirms that opinion in the minds of all who are connected with the institution. The selection of an Alumnus by the trustees shows the world that they have thorough confidence in the material turned out at this school.

Charles Coleman Thach was born at Athens, Ala., in 1860 and was educated in the A. and M. College at Auburn and Johns Hopkins University.

Professor Thach began teaching in 1877 at Hopkinsville, Ky., and one year later was elected assistant professor in the preparatory department of the A. and M. College, Auburn. In 1879 he was elected principal of that department. In 1880-81 he attended lectures in Latin and German at Johns Hopkins University and in 1881 was chosen to fill the chair of modern languages in the college conducted under the auspices of the Presbyterian church at Sherman, Tex. In 1882 he returned to the A. and M. College as adjunct professor of languages and has since been connected with the college, filling various chairs. In 1889 he was elected professor of English and Political Economy.

In 1887 Professor Thach traveled in Europe and in 1890 he received the degree of A. M. from the University of Alabama,

The extent of his educational work is indicated by the following partial list: 1899 representative of the college at the Association of Southern Colleges and Preparatory Schools, at University of Georgia; 1900 representative to the same Association at University of South Carolina; 1901 representative to the same Association at the University of the South; 1897 representative of the college at the National Educational Association, Washington, D. C., and read a paper before the Association on teaching English composition; representative at the same association at Charleston; representative before the Southern Educational conference at University of Georgia, and made an address on industrial education in Alabama; President Board of Trustees, Auburn Female Institute 1897-1902; President of the Department of Industrial Education of the Southern Educational Association 1901-1902.

He has delivered addresses and series of lectures in nearly all of the most important towns and cities in the South and at the leading schools and colleges.

In June 1902 he was unanimously elected by the Board of Trustees as the successor of the late Dr. William LeRoy Broun in the Presidency of the institution with which he had been so long connected and the wisdom of his selection has been evidenced in the continued progress and prosperity of the A. P. I. under his able and wise management.

During the year just closing, the enrollment has reached a figure considerably in excess of any previous record, while the scope of the work of the institution has been broadened and plans for enlarged usefulness in the future have been developed as the result of an increased income secured by the adoption of several important measures by the recent legislature—a result attained largely through the active and wisely directed efforts of President Thach.

President Thach is an active and useful citizen of the community in which he lives and takes a leading part in all movements, which have for their object the upbuilding of the community, and in the work of the church. He has been for many years the superintendent of one of the leading Sunday Schools of the town and takes an active interest in the college Y. M. C. A.

🗻 🧈 Young Mens' Christian Association 🧈 🗈

THE Young Men's Christian Association is a religious institution among the Christian students of this as of other institutions of our country and foreign lands, for the purpose of deepening their spiritual life and of influencing their fellow-students to take a stand for Christ. The great good done among young men in past years is a prophecy of the prosperity it is to have in the future.

The Bible Study Classes are intended to broaden the knowledge of the students of the Great Book, and by systematic daily study to furnish the only means of spiritual growth.

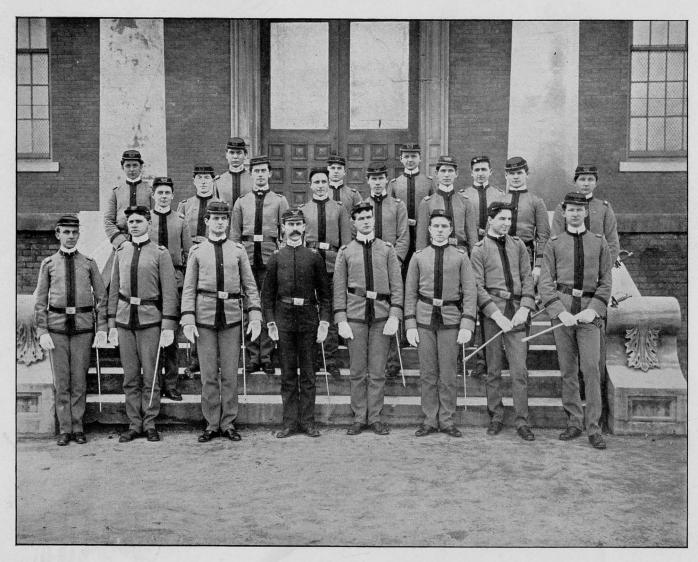

The regular meetings are held on Sunday afternoons at 3:30, and the prayer meetings on Thursday afternoons. The visits of the Secretary of the Southern Colleges and of the State Secretary have been the means of great benefit to the Association during the present year. The officers are as follows:

President, J. R. Searcy. Recording Secretary, R. Kaufman.

Vice-President, W. W. Rutland. Treasurer, George Dunglinson, Jr.

Corresponding Secretary, L. P. Hall. Librarian, E. J. Duncan.

KINDLY GARICATURES

From those who are not drawn perhaps a word of thanks is due. Each one of those who is drawn may console himself by looking at the other four, and if that does not suffice, may picture in his mind's eye something a little worse, the Zoo of Berlin, where some of the wild animals of the world, the very wildest, are gathered together — who does not fear their hoarse growl, their clutching claws, and fearing, think of the distinguished representatives above!

🗻 🎍 🖪 Soliloquy on Eating Auburn Beef 🤞 🎿 🗻

(With Apologies to Um. Shakespeare)...

O, that this too—to less solid flesh would melt, Or resolve itself into something that I could chew! Would that the Everlasting had not mixed So much gristle with this beefsteak. How tough, stale, tasteless and unchewable Seem to me all the pieces of this meat! Fie on't! O fie! 'tis untanned leather. On which we feed; Auburn and tanneries Possess it only. Heaven and Earth! Must I remember? Why, they've Put it on the table, As if there was nothing else in Auburn We could be fed on; and yet, Within ones mouth,— Let me not think on't—Toughness, thy name is Auburn beefsteak! O butcher! A Freshman, that wants discourse of reason Would have killed this younger—sold for beefsteak, Tender beefsteak: but no more like tender beefsteak. Than to I Hercules: O, most wicked Man, to sell such personified toughness To defenseless students! It is not, nor it cannot be of any good: But break, my teeth, for I must eat my dinner.

* * * Che Senior to The Auburn Girl * * *

Then fare thee well, my own true lass,

Then fare thee well to-night.

I kneel, my own, my love,

Beneath thine eye of loving light.

I am going, I am going,

Four years have flitted by,

Four years that seem as hours,

Since first I looked you in the eye.

And I went down before the blue

Of that siege-gun, thine eye.

Ah, Love, an' such were death,

'Twere sweet, and I would alway die.

When I met you—oh, do not sigh—
The lights were burning low,
All hearts were beating high,
At Auburn's kindly welcome show.

I must leave you, I must leave you,

Now raise your lips to mine,

And swear—nay, do not swear,

For I will e'er, fore'er be thine.

When I am gone, and others come

To storm the castle strong,

Will you be true, will you,

Will you be true for long, for long?

And—now Auburn skies are tender,

And Auburn hearts are true,

You will I remember,

While Auburn skies and hearts endure.

There's Dowdell with his pipe and his sweetened smile,
There are Messrs. Marshall and Troutman brimful of business guile;
There's the literary Pruitt—his mind with learning stored
And G. F. Freeman, editor, who runs the GLOMERATA Board.

There are two engineers who help to push the work along. The one a Thornton bright, the other a Knight so strong. There's a Bize who's work so well admired and sincere Who helps to carry on this effort of our senior year.

Now add to this resplendent group, last but not least, Those well known to fame and fellow scribes as our noble artists. And you've the list—peruse it well and as each name you greet, You'll own the Board of '03 is hard to beat.

They've all worked hard, this feeble eight,
And hope this publication
Will find some favor in your eyes
And meet with approbation.

Take a large pot with plenty of room in it, Pour in of water one quart and no more, On a slow fire set, and while you're stewing it, Into it these rare ingredients pour-One pint of sense, strong, highly flavored, Bottled by our chemists in the "lab," Three or four Kodaks, they're always much favored At gatherings of cadets to make a great show; One pound of poetry (see that it's new), Chopped fine and sprinkled with generous hand, Ten dozen jokes, each one humorous, short and true, Crammed with a wit that none can withstand. Let each fraternity a handsome group add, And attached, its coat of arms too, Then at the last for a final rich savor, add One pinch of literature, one will quite do. So after mixing and stirring and tasting And being quite careful to skim off the scum You will find if your task has been done without hasting, A GLOMERATA sublime in the residuum.

* * * What Would You Be? * * *

By R. W. Burton

I'd hate to be a barefoot boy
With all his cares and woes,
A map of grease upon his coat,
The nails knocked off his toes.

I shouldn't like to work the sums
Whose answers all are wrong,
And have the dust knocked out my pants
With hick'ries four feet long.

Or what is worse by far, I think, To love a pink-cheek lass And be cut out by brainless chaps Whose stock in trade is brass.

I'd hate to be a half-grown girl
And go to school all day,
And have to take some dogs along
To keep the boys away.

I couldn't play with dolls, you know,
Because too large I'd be;
I'd hate to give up chewing-gum,
I couldn't climb a tree.

I couldn't have a beau, of course— They'd say I was too young— And if I spoke some one would say: "Miss Smartie, hold your tongue."

I'd hate to be a college boy
And wear a uniform
And keep my coat all buttoned up
Whether 'twere cold or warm.

I'd hate to run myself to death,
To answer to my name,
And hear a vile report on me,
And Blobbs and Dobbs the same.

And worse than all, I think I'd hate
All night o'er books to pore,
And when my monthly grade came out,
To find I'd made a IV.

"Dammed to Everlasting Fame."-Pope

Acting on the suggestion—"Age before beauty"—we give a few facts about the Senior Class before the general statistics. The average senior is 20 years and six months old, is 5 feet 10 inches in height, weighs 150 pounds 10.8 oz. The size of his shoe is number 7, and he wears a number 7 hat.

Four seniors will be Physicians, four Pharmacists, three Electrical Engineers, three Civil Engineers, one Chemist, one Mechanical Engineer, one Biologist, one Mining Engineer, one star-fixer, one middle-man in a minstrel troupe and one Senior will chase Eagles—the round kind.

Dr. Smith is the most popular professor and "Tubby" Hill is the most popular instructor.

Miss May Harvey is the most popular Co-ed. Tracy Lay being the most popular Cadet.

Lieutenant J. H. Mitchell is conceded to be the most popular officer, while among the non-commissioned officers Sergeant C. S. Joseph won in a walk.

"Happy Hans" Schmidt makes us laugh the most and therefore received the vote for the wittiest man. For good looks "Kid" Turner takes the cake.

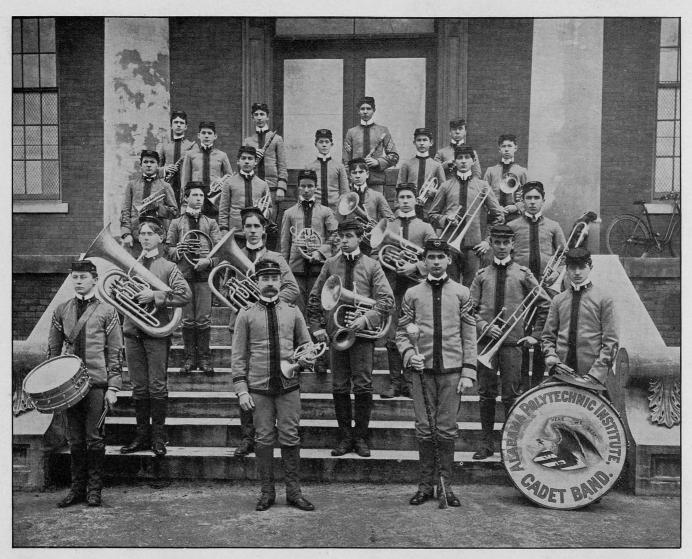

"Bunny" (W. W.) Davis is the most reckless user of the midnight oil

Henry Yonge is undoubtedly the Greatest Masher in Auburn.

George Dunglinson won the title of the most Intellectual Man in college.

"Doc" Foster is the biggest dude and N. P. Renfro is generally thought to be the least burdened with good looks.

The student body thinks "Jimmy Bigs" Elmer is the laziest man in college. [Jimmy, when you show this to Papa, tell him that "Large bodies move slowly."]

& & & Che Country School & & &

By R. W. Burton

Have you forgot the old schoolhouse
In the lone country dell
Where you ate up three spelling books
Before you learned to spell?

Have you forgot the woodland path
That led down to the spring
Whose hick'ry rods grew all too thick,
And one old grape-vine swing?

And how you swung with Martha Jane
In space just sized for one
And some one armed with hick'ry rod
Broke up your little fun?

The old school-house has tumbled down,
The wind shrieks through the cracks
Like boy's shrill voice in marble game:
"Now, Bill Griggs, 'vent you backs!"

No inhibition needed now—
Bill Griggs has won the game;
By selling sausage made of dog
He's gained both wealth and fame.

Where now are all the noisy boys

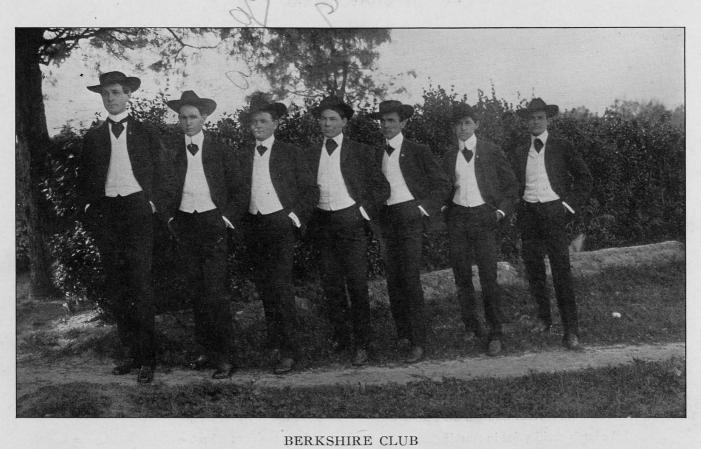

That thronged the town-ball ground?

Some are in Congress, some in jail,

And some can not be found.

Once the old master joined the game—
A giant at the bat—
And when he ran we all threw at
His tall old stove-pipe hat.

The tale you told to Mary Ann
Beneath the chestnut tree,
Is now forgot—'twas all rot—
Tale and tree both chestnuts—see?

* * * Che Berkshire Club * * *

Selections from the Minutes of the proceedings in the initial meeting of the "Berkshire Club."

When the illustrious seven met for the purpose of organizing, we made Cocky Johnston, whose abilities as a lawyer of exceeding erudition and lucidity of argument eminently fitted him for the exalted honor, Chairman.

The difficulty of selecting an appropriate name was soon overcome, and the extremely epicurean, aristocratic, appellation—"Berkkshire"— was agreed upon.

John McDuffie, whose proficiency in foreign tongues—especially French—has elicited favorable comment from the world renown linguist, Prof. Wiatt, now stood on his feet (or Trilbys rather) and moved that the Berkshires' regularly rendezvous on the boulevard at "half-past," for the purpose of indulging in a promenade. The motion was overwhelmingly carried.

The following resolutions, which had been previously drafted by Messrs. Chambers and Lay were next unanimously adopted with much acclamation and self-congratulation:

Resolved—First. That the Berkshires, separately and collectively are "it."

Second. That we intend to make the under-classmen acknowledge it and appreciate us in 1904.

Third. That if they don't the Berkshires individually and as a body will see to "it" that they catch "it" in the neck.

Fourth. That those unfortunates in our class and institution who have not the proud distinction of being one of us are not in "it."

Fifth. That although Walter Joseph K. and L. Earle T. and Albert M. A. all think they are "main cheeses," they are laboring under false impressions, for, by organizing, we have cornered the "cheese market" and are now in a position to expose the fallacy of their belief.

And M. H. and M. G. M. of H. now moved that each member be allowed to propose an additional resolution. This motion was favorably received although we didn't exactly comprehend what he was driving at until he let the cat out of the bag by formulating this, our sixth resolve:

Sixth. That T. P. McEldery reflects credit upon the Berkshires on account of his good looks and because he is not a bit in love with himself on that account (although the ladies are).

The others were not a bit backward in coming forward. In fact they rose to the occasion with alacrity and as a result six more resolutions were passed as follows:

Seventh. That the Berkshires owe J. S. Chambers a debt of gratitude for he has promised to exclude bona fide members of our order, when he begins to collect toll for allowing others the privilege of walking the streets of Auburn. (He has owned the city for quite a while now. In fact, ever since he wore corporal stripes.)

Eighth. That at our next meeting H. R. Luscher be required to disclose the following secrets, to wit: 1st.

Where he gets his corsets made. 2nd. The recipe for his face powder (also for his smile when with ladies.)

Ninth. That W. M. Wilson be appointed instructor in the science of flirting and continue his instructions until we all have become adept enough to be classed with him.

By R. W. Burton.

Mary had a little kid,

She fed him on old tin,

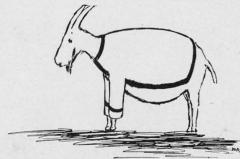

He gamboled much upon the green,

And never knew 'twas sin.

He stole away to school one day,
With wise and solemn looks,
And just to show his refined taste,
He ate up all the books.

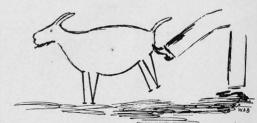

"He gamboled much spon the green,"

"He couldn't butt-on his coat."

To college Mary sent her kid—
The bad boys called him "Goat,"
And he was stuffed so full of books
He couldn't butt-on his coat.

He got no books into his head,
But swallowed them by scores,
And in due time, like other kids
Went home on his all IV's.

The wise man will tie his Jack on the campus; but the fool will ride him into the presence of Petrie.

A holiday is as wine to the spirit of man; but an exam. is bitter to the stomach.

The dish of hash is but a shallow vessel; yet doth it hold a grisly mystery, for the cook draweth the line at some things in other dishes, but in hash the line is ofttimes thrown in and cooked, too.

At all times be merciful unto thy Jack, ye men of the General Course, for he hath delivered thy Grade from the land of Fours.

Look well to the Sub-Freshman. He is not without wisdom, but the repute of wisdom belongeth to the Junior.

"See to it that thou let no man suffer for thy sins," not even in Tactics; for the wrath of Patrick will surely descend upon thy head and thy diploma will be in danger.

Ye have been told that a loud laugh bespeaketh a vacant mind; but he that laugheth not at a professor's joke indeed a fool.

It's a wise Senior that knows his grade in Physics or has any idea thereof, before 'tis posted.

* * * H Modern Fable * * *

Once upon a time one of Dr. Petrie's class-room Jokes made a sedate Senior to laugh out loud. Now, although the Joke had attained its majority and had voted for a year or two, this victory turned Its time-grizzled head and caused the same to swell even as much as Joe Dowdell's head did when he became a Captain. The Joke therefore applied to the Editor of the Glomerata for a place in its columns.

"My venerable friend," said the Editor, "I hate to hurt Your aged feelings, but don't You think You'd be out of place among the thoughtless jests that—"

"Sir," interrupted the Joke, trembling with indignation. "You are right. If I'm to figure in this new generation of Jokes, you are undoubtedly right; it would not be fit. But, sir, the question I want answered is, can not I have a column all to Myself? Does not My age, not to urge other considerations, authorize Me in making and your in granting that request Answer Me that, sir!" demanded the Joke, his cracked voice growing shrill with anger.

"Sir," answered the Editor, edging toward the door, "I have known You from the time I was a callow Freshman until now. So has the entire college. You are one of the institutions of Auburn. As such I revere You. I wouldn't hurt Your feelings for a Soda Water Check. But Your request is impossible. The GLOMERATA is a humorous book!" And here a vacancy in the room created a presumption violent as the toothache that the Editor had disappeared.

This Fable teaches one to look for a Moral in everything.

Che Late Lamented Cannibal and the Succulent Freshman

H Cragedy in Verse

ACT I.

Oh, a Cannibal gay went out one day in search of a bite to eat, When a Freshman he spied, the Cannibal cried, "Now this is a genuine treat!"

ACT II.

So this Cannibal gay and the Freshman jay sat down to a festive spread, And the Cannibal served as he steadied his nerve to cut off the Freshman's head.

ACT III.

With a schooner of malt and a grain of salt he swallowed that Freshman whole; Though the feet were enough, and the meat was tough; he swallowed him body and soul.

ACT IV.

Then the Cannibal cried till he nearly died; in vain did he seek relief; He took brandy and gin 'till his head did spin, while trying to drown his grief.

ACT V.

But the remedies failed, and naught prevailed save the Freshman far inside, So the Cannibal host gave up the ghost, and there on the desert died.

CHORUS.

For that Freshman, he was green—as green as could be!

No apple on the tree was e'er as green as he—as green, grassy green as he!

* * * My Dream * * *

She came with the unmistakable light of hope shining in her eyes and stood at the foot of the ladder. At first she looked about her with a smile of confidence, then tenderly down at the books which looked heavy enough to burden her slender arm, but she held them closer as she placed her foot on the bottom round of the ladder and begun to ascend rather swiftly. "The beginning is so beautiful, I shall not fail," she mused, "besides many have gone before, for the ladder is much worn from use, and surely I may do what others have done." She climbed on with tireless step, her eyes always gazing upward as if eager to catch some glimpse of the Golden Links which held the other end of the ladder secure; but she could see only the two parallel sides, stretching themselves further and further, and holding in place the numberless cross-pieces on which she should have to step before she could reach the end now hidden by a shining mist.

She did not notice that toward noonday her step had lost just a trifle of its lightness and that her precious burden felt heavy on her arm, but continued to climb with heart strengthened by hope eternal, and noticed the ladder was less worn as she climbed on.

"Ah," thought she, half in pity, "the faint-hearted became weary and turned back, but I see beyond a few marks made by the feet of those whose eyes were encouraged by the shining mist—perhaps by a glimpse of the Links of Gold."

Toward sunset she felt the weight of her precious burden but she pressed it more closely and toiled on until tears blinded her eyes and she could not see. She sat trembling and heart-sick, resting her weary feet on the ladder. As she looked back the beginning seemed so far away; after all, she had gone far toward her goal. She dashed the tears from her eyes, and springing to her feet turned and renewed her progress with heart made stronger by overcoming her weakness. She had not climbed many steps before she tottered and came near falling and in the bitterness of despair she cried: "I too, must fail! It is not for me to see the Links of Gold!"

She looked at her books as a mother would look at her child and turned them one by one in an abstract manner.

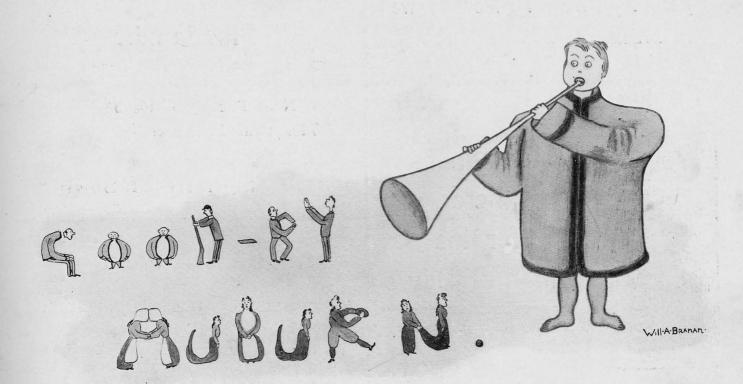

"None may rest on this ladder; I must retrace my steps," and as she rose slowly a voice, the one dearer than all others, called to her from above:

"Do not stop, beloved, others—I have gone further and you shall not turn back. Come, I am waiting for you!"

She looked and beheld him gazing into her eyes, as if to glorify her with his love, and almost ran in her eagerness to reach him; and as she did he held out his hand to help her and said: "We both have made a mistake; we should have started together, then you would have carried my song-album and I your books, for they are too heavy for you to bear alone. How I have longed for you! Now I shall carry your burdens and you mine, for we can not live apart. Did you not see I had grown weary and should have gone back had I not seen you coming far behind?"

And as he gazed deep into her eyes, he lovingly laid his song-album in her arms and she held her books out to him, but before they had reached his grasp their ears were startled by sweetest melodywhich seemed to come from far beyond to draw them nearer the shining mists and strengthen their faith in the Links of Gold. Voices of those who had gone on together, as they should now. But the books slipped from her grasp and fell to the fathomless darkness below as he clasped her empty hand. They stretched forth their hands in a helpless manner and as she turned from him he cried, "Oh my beloved, surely you would not leave me now; come help me to live my life; come and give me your strength for without you I must fail."

"Without you there is no life, this I have learned," she answered," but I can not leave my books, they are a part of me. I have carried them for so long. I shall not let you turn back with me for I can best find them alone." Sorrowfully she returned the song-album and left him, never once looking back until she had neared the bottom of the ladder, when she gazed upward with tear-dimmed eyes and saw him standing as when she left, listening entranced to the far-off melody. "He will forget," she murmured. And all the night long she groped in the darkness for her lost treasure, always uncertain of her way and childishly afraid of the dark, and when the treasure was found she saw by the dim light of dawn that it's beauty had increased a hundred fold, and she pressed it to her heart and wept in the fullness of her joy.
