Foreword

This directory presents the results of research conducted in 2000 by the National Institute of Corrections (NIC) Information Center in cooperation with the NIC Community Corrections Division. The intent of the research was to identify correctional programs in the United States that have been developed specifically to meet the needs of women offenders. A written survey instrument was sent to state and local probation and parole agencies nationwide, resulting in the identification of more than 250 programs in 32 states.

Program entries are organized by state and city. Within each program entry, information is provided on such factors as:

" The public agency delivering the program or contracting for the program's services,
" The target offender population(s),
" The basic program format,
" The program's size and start date,
" The program's use of women-specific assessment instruments,
" The program's evaluation status, and
" The specific treatment and other issues addressed within the program or addressed through referral to other community-based service providers.

While providing an overview of the status of women's programs in the community, the directory will be particularly useful for jurisdictions seeking information for developing programs of their own. A searchable database of the information published in this directory is available on the NIC web site. See www.nicic.org/services/special/women/default.htm for a link to the online database.

Data used in evaluation:
Outcome measures include recidivism and measures related to relapse and post-program life functioning.

Notes
Sentencing advocacy is a key component of the program. The National Development and Research Institute (NDRI) has included Crossroads in a multi-site, longitudinal evaluation of treatment programs for women offenders. The Vera Institute of Justice is also collecting data as part of an evaluation of New York City alternative to incarceration programs - drug treatment and non-drug treatment programs. The outcome measure is post-program rearrest.

Current partner abuse; Mental health; Transportation; Housing; Transitional services/aftercare.

Notes
The program is para-military in structure, with an emphasis on discipline, treatment, education, and community service. The disciplinary regimen is very structured and regulated. This provides time for reflection, along with sobriety and a clear mind to do so.
