Autumn Bingo Challenge

The West Virginia Department of Tourism recently unveiled its official 2026 fall foliage projection map, introducing weekly updates throughout the season to provide travelers with accurate leaf-peeping information. They also announced their Almost Heaven Swing BINGO Challenge for the autumn season. Inspired by the state's swing photo locations, the "SWINGO" challenge invites travelers to visit nearly 60 swing spots across West Virginia and check in on mobile devices to earn seasonal prizes. To participate, visit wvtourism.com/swings to register for a digital bingo card delivered directly to your smartphone. Autumn colors were projected to spread throughout the region until early November.

Guy's Turn

The Tipping Point

Hi Guy,

I am a Bingo hall staffer at a busy Indian casino. I enjoy working at Bingo and also enjoy playing during my free time. When I win I always include tipping the caller and the floor worker(s) because I know from experience how hard they work to make an outing at Bingo pleasant. And I have to say that I am surprised by how many players do not tip. Yes, I understand that many people consider tipping optional and may or may not do it, depending on their mood, jackpot amount or whatever. But the fact is, hard work for low wages deserves a tip in appreciation for service.

At some of the places I attend, the floor workers will be tipped but the caller won't. This I absolutely do not understand. Players must think that the caller just sits there and calls out numbers. But there is much more to it. And folks seem to have no problem blaming the caller for their bad luck and shouting insults at him or her. But rarely does a caller get a thank you or an expression of appreciation for doing a good job or get compensated when a player has good luck and wins big. —Hard Worker in Nevada, via email

Dear Hard Worker,

I agree with you that players should be more thoughtful of callers and not blame them for bad luck. It has to be awkward to be sitting in full view at the front of gaming room and be verbally slapped with complaints and grumpy insults for things that are simply not under a caller's control.

The topic of tipping at Bingo is a tricky one. People who currently, or at some time in their lives, worked at a job that relied on tips, understand how important tipping is and make sure to tip appropriately. Those who have not been at the receiving end of a job that includes tips may sometimes perceive it as an option they choose not to exercise.

This becomes particularly true in a Bingo hall. For one thing, lots of people spend the majority of their gaming time in not-for-profit, charitable Bingo halls where tipping is not allowed. When they switch to a for-profit Bingo, they may simply not be aware that tipping is appropriate, what to tip, when to tip or whom to tip, so they just ignore the tradition and do not tip at all.

Others resist tipping because Bingo is gaming, where players rack up lots of losses between wins. Some feel that most of a jackpot is just recouping past losses, and "giving away" any portion of it in the form of a tip to a Bingo worker is basically just giving more money back to the casino or hall.

Finally, the question of whom to tip is a very slippery slope. You clearly are a caller and would like to get a tip. So would the runner who brought the player his or her winnings, the front-desk worker who sold the winning paper, the vendor who sold them that lucky pink dauber, and the staffer at the front door who gave the player a fist bump and said, "Tonight's your night!" Maybe pooling tips and spreading them evenly to the staff would be easier for players and workers alike?

I'm afraid that I do not see an early end to the ongoing controversy over tipping at Bingo. But I hope your letter will at least encourage more players to keep tipping in mind during their next trip to a for-profit gaming establishment. —Guy

* "I have stained coffee cups. My hands have arthritis, and it's hard to wash them by hand. A young woman at church suggested I purchase a small bottle of dishwasher soap. The kind you put in a dishwasher, even though I don't have one. I squirt a little in the cup and add hot water. It sits while I wash up the other dishes and then swishes right out." — T.T. in Missouri

* "Check your area to see if vocational schools offer low-cost or free auto repairs. Sometimes you can have work done for the cost of parts so that students can be trained on your issue." — R.E. in North Carolina

* "For the summer I fill a gym-size duffel bag with "spontaneity supplies" and keep it in the trunk of my car. It includes swimsuits for all family members, a blanket and cups, plates and silverware for a picnic. Now, if we find we have some unexpected free time, we can go to the beach or pool, or have a picnic by just picking up some sandwich supplies from the closest grocery store!" — via e-mail

* You can use a clean paper milk carton to pour batter for pancakes. The spout makes it easy to pour and reduces splatter.

* "I got tired of always looking for the dustpan, and so I put a magnet on the back of it. It sticks right on the side of the fridge, right next to the broom." — L.M. in Kentucky

* Avoid eye strain by making sure your computer monitor is in the correct position. It should be placed directly in front of you, at least an arm's length away. If you have trouble seeing the screen, you can adjust the resolution to make the screen items bigger.

The American Red Cross Declares National Blood Emergency

Latino blood donors can help make a lifesaving difference

The American Red Cross has declared a national blood emergency and is urging all eligible individuals to give blood to help ensure patients receive the transfusions and care they need.

This decline in the blood supply and in donation appointments comes at a time when maintaining a stable blood inventory is especially difficult. During the summer months, schools and colleges are on break, resulting in fewer blood drives that typically help support the blood supply.

More people are traveling and spending time outdoors, increasing the likelihood of accidents and traumatic injuries. According to AAA, fatal crashes involving teen drivers increase by 30% during the so-called “100 Deadliest Days,” which run from Memorial Day through Labor Day. This trend disproportionately affects communities such as the Latino community, which has a larger youth population.

A trauma patient can require as many as 100 units of blood, and it is the blood already on hospital shelves and ready for use that can make all the difference in a life-threatening situation.

Unlike other medical treatments, blood cannot be manufactured or stockpiled indefinitely. It must be continually replenished because it remains available for transfusion for only a limited period of time—just a few weeks for red blood cells and only a few days for platelets.

A well-maintained blood supply is essential for treating and saving the lives of people facing emergencies, mothers experiencing severe bleeding during childbirth, and patients with cancer who depend on transfusions.

This blood shortage is especially critical for patients who need B-negative and O-positive blood. “This is where the Latino community can make a lifesaving difference,” said Dr. Maribel Garcia, regional medical director for the American Red Cross. “Nearly 60% of Latinos have Type O blood, one of the most needed blood types and one that is frequently used in emergencies.”

The Red Cross is grateful to Latino blood donors, whose participation increased by 7% last year, and encourages them to continue supporting the blood supply and helping patients across all communities through their blood donations.

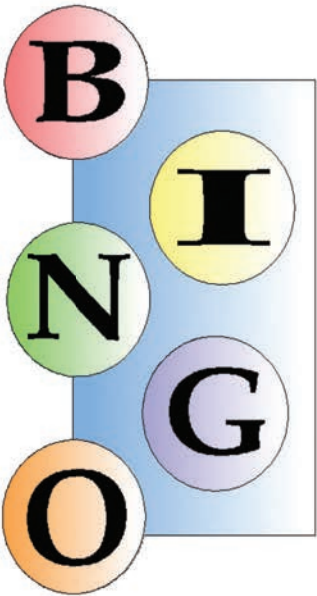

The most important way to help during this blood emergency is to make an appointment to give blood today by using the Red Cross Blood Donor App, visiting RedCrossBlood.org, or calling 1-800-RED CROSS (1-800-733-2767).

BINGO JOHN Medieval Bingo

(Last month, we left Bingo John in the clutches of Sarah-Mae, but it was something else. She had solid blue eyes and grabbed Bingo John by the ankles then dragged him into her arms. He tried to get away but fainted as he fell into her embrace. When he woke up, he tore out of the Bingo hall and out into the desert.)

I knew I had to get out of there. There were hundreds of them staring down at me with their blue eyes. The thing imitating Sarah-Mae was there to. She wanted something more. Something I was not going to give.

Now I am out in the desert. The sand stretched as far as I could see. Clouds of sand followed across the horizon like ghost ships floating on a dry seabed. Even with the pain in my ankles, I started across the barren landscape. I felt lucky to get away. My life was adrift again. Each of the cells in my body drifted, mindless, towards the dark horizon. My head hung low with exhaustion. Then out across the horizon, a row of mountains appeared in the distance. They were blue at first. Then grey and misty as they got closer. I knew there would be water there. And water was something I desperately needed.

By that afternoon, my tongue swelled to the roof of my mouth. I could no longer swallow. And I could taste the copper bitterness of blood from my split lip. This seemed to go on for days, but I made it to the base of the mountains. They rose up in a solid cliff from the sand. I stood stunned when I got closer. The tall crags blotted out the sky as far as I could see. Black ravens hovered around the tops. They swirled like painted crosses in the clear blue sky. My eyes scanned the peaks, when right in front of me, I saw a Bingo hall. It was perched on top of a craggy precipice. I started up the cliff, because I knew I had to get there. When I got closer, I saw that the birds had red piercing eyes. They all seemed to peer at me as they circled above.

The Bingo hall was an old castle, painted white, with streaming flags all around the top. A neon BINGO sign was over the front door. I figured the whole thing was another trap, like all the other Bingo halls on my journey. But it was either here or back to the desert. So, I decided to go in and see what they were playing.

As I opened the thick wooden door it seemed like a regular old Bingo hall except everything was medieval. There were knights in armor all around the outside edges. The staff wore lederhosen and served tankards of beer to the rowdy crowd. Everything was big and hand carved. I felt like I walked onto the set of a Robin Hood movie. Once they noticed me, I was handed a tankard, and the crowd erupted into a rowdy cheer.

I was the only one there not dressed in flowing clothes. I went in and took a spot next to an old, wrinkled lady with flowing golden hair. She hunched over her cards and scraped pieces of baked pretzel into her toothless mouth.

She put some cards in front of me then said, “It is so nice of you to join us.”

I took a swig of beer when she spoke. Then choked, beer spilling out on the table. “It is all right,” she said, stroking my back.

I figured it was best to play along. After a few more swigs, I started feeling very relaxed. I stared dreamily at the golden-haired lady when the trumpets started. Everyone got situated around their cards. Then this old man came out on a podium and said, “Let the game begin.”

He wore a big flowing white beard. His face was covered with millions of wrinkles like a crumpled road map. Once the game got started, I realized it was not an ordinary Bingo game. Instead of regular Bingo numbers, the caller announced days of the year. They were playing a coverall game, and the object of the game was to daub out all 365 days of the year.

I kept silent, because I didn’t want to draw any attention to myself. But as the game went on, I noticed a strange change coming over the crowd. They were getting younger and younger. Pretty soon, I was sitting next to a bunch of teenagers. They were all giggly and fresh eyed when they looked at me. Then they were little kids, barely able to see over the top of the table. I briefly looked at my cards. I was going to win. By the time the last number was called and I yelled, “Bingo!” the whole room was nothing but little babies squirming about.

They were the most beautiful babies. They glowed from the inside. My heart sang every time my eyes met theirs. It was hypnotic. When I finally pulled my attention away, I realized there were hundreds of them staring at me. I did not feel in danger. But I knew to focus on my cards. I was the winner. I waited for something, anything to break the tension. Suddenly, the caller yelled out, “Happy Summer!”

Next month, Bingo John leaves the babies in the Bingo Castle and treks across the desert.
