Hunter Makes Presidential Bid Official

By JIM DAVENPORT

The Associated Press

Thursday, January 25, 2007; 10:44 PM

SPARTANBURG, S.C. -- Republican Rep. Duncan Hunter, best known for his advocacy on behalf of the military, launched a longshot bid for the presidency Thursday in this early voting state.

Frequently citing Ronald Reagan, Hunter told supporters he wants to pick up on the former president's legacy.

"I want to lead that policy of peace through strength," said Hunter, a strong supporter of the Iraq war.

The 14-term conservative from California, who has made no secret of his White House aspirations, set up a presidential exploratory committee earlier this month.

He initially announced his intentions in October, becoming the first GOP candidate to declare, and then began making stops in early primary and caucus states, including Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina.

He joins an increasingly crowded GOP field of declared and likely candidates, including Sens. John McCain of Arizona and Sam Brownback of Kansas, former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, and former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani.

Hunter has been a familiar face on Capitol Hill and at the Pentagon. Until Democrats took control of Congress this month, he was chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, the powerful panel that oversees military policy.

However, Hunter is little known outside of Congress and his San Diego district. He is a strong opponent of illegal immigration who wants fences extended along the U.S.-Mexico border and supports the prosecution of smugglers bringing illegal immigrants across the border.

Last week, Hunter filed a bill calling for a congressional pardon of two U.S. Border Patrol agents who are both serving more than a decade in prison for shooting a Mexican drug dealer as he fled, then covering up the crime.

In remarks before his speech, Hunter emphasized the importance of South Carolina in winning the GOP nomination.

"Nobody wins the presidency without winning South Carolina," Hunter said.

Hunter already has some deep-pocket allies in the state, including textile magnate Roger Milliken, who supports Hunter's promise to protect U.S. manufacturers threatened by cheap, overseas labor.

"I'm thrilled that he's running," said Milliken, who hasn't yet endorsed a presidential candidate. "This point of view he represents must be heard."

Hunter, 58, was born in Riverside, Calif., and was an Army Ranger in Vietnam. He worked his way through law school with farming and construction jobs.

Hunter won his U.S. House seat in 1980 and has been an ardent military supporter. His son has spent a pair of seven-month tours in Iraq.

Hunter to visit N.H. for first time since announcing presidential ambitions

U.S. Representative Duncan Hunter, a California Republican, was flying to Manchester on Friday night and will stay in New Hampshire through Monday evening.

Oddly, no one in the state knew about his upcoming trip until Friday afternoon, when he began calling Republican activists before and after he gave a speech on the House floor.

In one of those calls, for an interview with the Globe, Hunter said he wanted his trip to be "low-key." Hunter told Republicans that he didn't have much of a schedule at all and that he would pop in unannounced to local Republican leaders and media.

Hunter, 54, is the ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee.

On Friday, an e-mail from Mitt Romney's sons suggested that whoever the Republican presidential nominee is will have to raise $100 million. Hunter said he wouldn't need to raise that kind of money because "most of that money goes to pay for consultants that help them look like they are conservative and I am conservative already."

Hunter has already visited Iowa and South Carolina.

The 2008 ad blitz begins

By Jessica Holzer

Presidential campaign advertising will start hitting the airwaves in the coming months, far earlier in the election cycle than during the 2004 race, and the ads will barrage the American public for much longer, delivering a windfall to television and radio stations, industry experts say.

In the age of television, there never has been a presidential race so wide-open.

"In the history of modern broadcasting, we haven't had an election where we haven't had a White House incumbent," said George Reed-Dellinger, who tracks the industry for Washington Analysis, a political intelligence consultancy. "The broadcasters are licking their chops."

For the first time since 1972, both Republican and Democratic presidential nominees are expected to forego public financing entirely, allowing them to raise and spend unlimited sums on the largest item of any campaign budget: television spots.

Moreover, the nominees may be decided by February if four large states — Florida, California, New Jersey and Illinois — succeed in moving up their presidential primaries. Such a shift would push candidates to market themselves earlier in these states that are not traditional battlegrounds, but are home to some of the most expensive media markets in the country.

"The 2008 election will begin in earnest in terms of ad buys in late spring," predicted Evan Tracey, the head of the Campaign Media Analysis Group, which tracks political ad spending for TNS Media Intelligence.

The scramble has already begun. White House hopeful Rep. Duncan

Hunter (R-Calif.) hit the airwaves on Dec. 19 with a television ad in Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina. Funded by his PAC, Peace Through Strength, it touted his tough stance on border control.

By contrast, Howard Dean went on the air first on June 17, 2003. "It's a full seven months earlier than 2004," Tracey said.

Moveon.org has run ads on local stations in Des Moines, Iowa and in Manchester, N.H., as well as nationally on CNN, that attack Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), the frontrunner for the Republican nomination. The spot criticizes President Bush's plan to raise troop levels in Iraq and asserts the idea came from the senator.

The rush to run ads will no doubt serve as fodder for groups that push for campaign finance reform.

"Do you realize how much pain these ads are going to cause the American public?" the president of the group Democracy 21, Fred Wertheimer, asked. "They just got done bombarding them and here we go again."

Tracey predicted that the 2008 cycle will be roughly in line with the record-breaking $2 billion spent on all political advertising in the 2006 midterm elections, and should easily top the $1.7 billion spent in 2004. More has been spent in midterm years than in presidential years because of the higher number of gubernatorial races.

"We've never seen the money that we're going to see spent on this campaign," said Pat Roberts, the head of the Florida Association of Broadcasters, which represents both television and radio stations in the state.

If Florida shifts its primary date, political ads will start hitting the airwaves in November, he predicted.

The national sales manager for KCRG-TV in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Steve Lake, said he already has received calls about running issue ads from some outside groups. In recent presidential races, such ads weren't aired until late summer.

But earlier primaries in some big states, especially in the battleground of Florida, may siphon money from Iowa and New Hampshire.

"It may split the candidates' attention, time and money and negate a tidal wave of money in New Hampshire," the general manager of WMUR in Manchester, Jeff Bartlett, said.

Tracey estimates it will cost $3-5 million a week to reach the bulk of voters in California. That could be prohibitively expensive for some candidates, and it could prompt those with bigger war chests to buy ads on the national cable networks. Within 60 days of the election, federal candidates are guaranteed airtime and cut rates for their ads. Ads by Google

“If you’re talking about having all these states frontloaded, it might be more efficient to buy the whole country,” he said.

The cable industry is predicting that it will get a bigger slice of campaign dollars.

“I think they’re going to ramp up their cable advertising as a whole, on a national and local basis,” said Chuck Thompson of the Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau.

Hunting for votes in S.C.

UNION-TRIBUNE

February 26, 2007

They say it is rare for someone to announce a presidential candidacy in the state of South Carolina. Unless of course, the candidate comes from the Palmetto State.

Duncan Hunter doesn't. His home is 2,288 miles to the west, where palm trees make us think of the natural beauty of the desert, not swamps.

They also say it makes more sense, if you're a White House hopeful, to focus your early money and energy on the two states that hold the nation's first presidential contests for both political parties – Iowa and New Hampshire. The idea is to visit so many town meetings you lose track, to practically own stock in the local coffee joints, and to talk the ear off every last voter and political operative you can hunt down.

You do all of this especially if you're a third-tier candidate, like our Republican congressman from Alpine, who desperately needs to make an early splash if he hopes to win the sort of national attention, campaign money and political momentum that might carry him through states with later primaries.

Since announcing around Halloween that he was considering a run for the GOP presidential nomination, Hunter has been to South Carolina at least four times, certainly more often than he has visited New Hampshire or Iowa. Late last month, he made his campaign official while in Spartanburg, S.C. And it was in South Carolina, North Carolina and South Dakota where he aired his first TV ads – commercials highlighting his belief that China is stealing American jobs and threatening U.S. security by “cheating” at trade.

LOOKING PAST IOWA, N.H.

Such ads might not have worked so well in Iowa, whose voters tend to be conservative on most social issues – the state's GOP caucuses are typically dominated by religious conservatives – but less conservative on military and foreign-policy matters.

Up in New Hampshire, meanwhile, far-right candidates don't play so well now that independents, who can vote in the primary elections, exude such influence. While George W. Bush may have prevailed among Republicans in the 2000 contest there, it was Arizona Sen. John McCain who courted independents and carried off a 19-point victory.

South Carolina, meanwhile, is staunchly Republican. Even the Democrats tend to be conservative. It's a state whose textile industry has been battered by overseas competition, a welcoming environment for Hunter's protectionist trade views.

Moreover, South Carolina holds its contest Jan. 29, just seven days after New Hampshire's. Eight years ago, GOP candidates had 18 days between those two elections. How candidates do in this first test in the South could influence the nation's first impression of them, and thus their popularity in contests to follow.

While front-running McCain has locked up the endorsements of half the South Carolina Legislature, he could have trouble courting the Christian conservatives who may be critical to winning the party's nomination – and who aren't convinced that the Arizona lawmaker shares their values on banning gay marriage and other social topics.

HARD-LINERS FOR HUNTER

They'll have no such qualms about Hunter. Rep. Trent Franks – the anti-abortion, anti-gay-marriage congressman who recently split with Arizona's GOP congressional delegation to back Hunter – has called the former House Armed Services Committee chairman “an unequivocal social and fiscal conservative.”

Hunter was most recently in South Carolina last week to name his state campaign advisers, whose views buttressed that point.

One adviser, Horry County Auditor Lois Eargle, highlighted her tough stand on illegal immigrants. The former county GOP chairwoman stood beside Hunter and told reporters that when an illegal immigrant came to her office last week asking for free legal help for an abused child, Eargle advised that the woman “get back to Mexico.” Whatever one thinks about this brand of humanitarianism, there's no question that it dovetails nicely with Hunter's hard-line stand on illegal immigration.

Meanwhile, Hunter's campaign co-chairman will be Henry Jordan, an unsuccessful candidate for lieutenant governor who said last year that science doesn't support Darwin's theory that man evolved from apes. “I mean, you've got to be stupid to believe in evolution, I mean really,” he told The Associated Press at the time.

The day after those announcements, Hunter spent Friday visiting with FreedomWorks, a group that advocates cutting taxes and shrinking government whose chairman is that well-known Texas conservative, former House Majority Leader Dick Armey.

Candidate used PAC funds for N.H. ads Calif. Republican may be violating laws, analysts say

The Boston Globe

By James W. Pindell, Globe Correspondent | February 27, 2007

MANCHESTER, N.H. -- Republican presidential candidate Duncan Hunter, a California congressman, has used his political action committee to run New Hampshire television ads introducing himself to voters -- in what some specialists say could be a violation of campaign finance laws.

In the ads, Hunter walks beside a huge wire fence and calls for it to be extended along hundreds of miles of the US border with Mexico. He then asks for viewers to "join with me, Duncan Hunter, at Peace Through Strength. Let's make sure Homeland Security builds the border fence."

At the end of the ad, viewers are encouraged to visit the PAC's website, peacethroughstrengthpac.com. If viewers go to the site a page appears that reads "please visit Duncan Hunter for President 2008" and providing the link to his homepage, a move that can imply the PAC's endorsement, another potential law violation. Campaign finance laws limit the use of PACs, which have much higher limits on individual donations than those imposed on presidential campaigns, to no more than $5,000 in spending on any presidential candidacy.

But in New Hampshire alone, Hunter's Peace Through Strength PAC made two separate ad buys on WMUR-TV in Manchester totaling $17,575. Both purchases were made after Hunter opened his presidential committee, which is supposed to cover the costs of his run for the White House.

"He is in some pretty dangerous [legal] territory," said Jan Witold Baran, a campaign law attorney who was general counsel to the Republican National Committee and to President George H.W. Bush's 1988 campaign.

Hunter's campaign spokesman, Roy Tyler, said the PAC-financed ad is simply an "issue ad" and does not promote his presidential campaign. He said the campaign's lawyers approved the decision to run the spot.

"We believe they are just issue ads and as such we can run them where we want as often as we want," said Tyler, noting that Hunter does not identify himself as a presidential candidate.

Among those Tyler said he asked was Michelle Kelley, an election lawyer who serves as the PAC's treasurer. Kelley declined to comment for this story.

Politicians considering presidential races often have used political action committees to pay for travel to early primary states and build support by contributing money to people running for state or local offices. But once a candidate forms a presidential committee, he or she is required to use campaign-committee accounts for all money spent running for office.

The advantage of PACs is that donors can give up to $5,000 per person a year, as compared with a campaign account where donors are limited to $2,300 per person per election cycle.

"I don't think [Hunter's use of both committees] is a loophole -- it might be an outright violation," said Stephen R. Weissman, associate director for policy at the Campaign Finance Institute in Washington.

The Federal Election Commission enforces campaign law violations.

Campaign finance specialists said that if Hunter is allowed to use PAC money for ads promoting himself, then such acts will become routine. "If the FEC doesn't enforce this and do it in an airtight way, then others will surely exploit it," said Ray La Raja, a political science professor at University of Massachusetts at Amherst. ■

Romney Touts Business Savvy In New Presidential Ads

February 20, 2007 12:50 p.m. EST

William Macklin - All Headline News Staff Reporter

Boston, MA (AHN) - Mitt Romney: former Massachusetts governor, Republican presidential candidate, business legend.

That's the pitch in Romney's first presidential campaign ads slated to go on the air in key early voting states this week.

"This is not a time for more talk and dithering in Washington. It's a time for action," says the former governor at the end of a 60 second spot in which he is also described as the "business legend" who "rescued the Olympics" and "turned around a Democratic state."

Romney, a one-time venture capitalist, is the second candidate from either major party to air campaign ads, following California congressman Duncan Hunter, a Republican, who began airing ads in South Carolina, North Carolina and South Dakota last week.

Hunter is considered a long shot, while Romney is widely viewed as a serious contender who could parlay his successful term as governor of Massachusetts into real political capital. Romney, who declined to seek a second term as governor, is also credited with helping to restore credibility to the 2002 Winter Olympics when he took over as president of the Olympic organizing committee after a bid-rigging scandal.

Romney must now compete in a GOP presidential field dominated by high-profile players, including former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani and Arizona Sen. John McCain.

Romney's ad, which is scheduled to start airing Wednesday and will rotate in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Michigan and Florida, is an apparent attempt to build much needed name recognition.

"These ads are aimed at telling interested voters exactly who Mitt Romney is and why he is the right choice as our next president," Romney spokesman Kevin Madden told the Associated Press in an e-mail. "Our goal was to show Governor Romney unplugged and get people as close to being on the campaign trail with him as you can get."

The spots, which will also include a 30 second version, are being paid for out of a campaign chest Romney has been building almost since he let it be known that he would seek the GOP nod.

The AP reports that Romney took in $6.5 million at his first campaign event on Jan. 9 and since then has collected another $2.4 million.

Romney's campaign declined to say how much was spent on this week's ad buy.
