Sunday Morning Message: Lord, Teach us to Share... Like You! Part II

Sunday Evening Message: A Mind Like Jesus

The Book of Romans

Romans is the longest and most theologically significant of the letters of Paul, “the very purest gospel” (Luther). The opening contains the usual prescript (1:1-7) and thanksgiving (1:8-15) and is concluded with a transitional statement of the theme of the letter: the gospel as the revelation of God’s righteousness, a righteousness that can be experienced only by faith (1:16-17).

The gospel is the righteousness of God by faith (1:18-4:25). Righteousness of God by faith is the theme of the first major section of the letter. Paul paves the way for this theme by explaining why it was necessary for God to manifest his righteousness and why humans can experience this righteousness only by faith. For God has made himself known to all people through creation; their turning from him to gods of their own making renders them “without excuse” (1:20-23). Even less excusable are Jews, for they have a clear and detailed statement of God’s will in their law. Mere possession of that law or bearing the outward mark of God’s covenant (circumcision) does not suffice to protect the Jews from God’s wrath (2:1-3:8). So, Paul concludes, all people, both Jews and Gentiles, are helpless slaves of sin and cannot be brought into relationship with God by anything they might do (3:9-20).

The gospel as the power of God for salvation (5:1-8:39). Having shown how sinful human beings can be declared right before God through faith, Paul, in the second major section of the letter, draws out the significance of this act both for the future judgment and for the present earthly life. Being justified means “peace with God,” or reconciliation to God, and especially a secure hope for vindication on the day of judgment (5:1-11). The ground for this hope is the believer’s relationship to Christ, who, undoing the effects of Adam’s sin, has won eternal life for all who belong to him (5:12-21).

Nevertheless, although transferred into the new realm, where Christ, righteousness, grace, and life reign, the Christians still must battle the powers of this present realm: sin, the law, death, and the flesh. But we battle with confidence, knowing that Christ has set us free from the tyranny of these powers. Therefore, sin can no longer dictate terms to us (6:1-14); God is now our master, which our lives must reflect (6:15-23). Likewise, the law, which, because of sin, made the situation of people worse instead of better, no longer holds sway over the believer (7:1-25). Through the agency of God’s Spirit, the Christian is assured of final victory over death and the power of the flesh (8:1-13).
