First Corinthians Part II

We return to the contrast between wisdom and folly, Paul directly assaults any remaining misconceptions about Christian leadership: the Corinthians are deceiving themselves if they think their partisan spirit is a mark of wisdom, when the Scriptures promote humility and when genuine Christian maturity recognizes that in Christ all Christian leaders—and everything else—have become part of the Christians' inheritance (3:18-23). Paul concludes by showing that Christian leaders and those who follow them must alike recognize that God alone is the One who makes the distinctions, and He alone rightly assesses performance (4:1-7).

Indeed, the Corinthians should learn this lesson by the simple contrast between their own self-vaunting pretensions and the way the apostles are treated as the scum of the earth (4:8-11). They should learn to imitate the Christian conduct of their own father in Christ, the apostle Paul himself, and thus align themselves with what is normative in other churches (4:14-17). The prospect of Paul's impending visit constitutes both a final appeal and a scarcely veiled threat (4:18-21).

Whether the further reports that Paul deals with in chapters 5-6 also came from Chloe's people or from some other source—perhaps from Stephanas, Fortunatus, Achaicus (16:17)—is unclear. Three issues dominate these chapters. The first is a case of incest (5:1-13), resulting in Paul's clarifying what he had meant in an earlier letter to the Corinthians (5:9-13); the second deals with the problem of litigation between believers (6:1-11); and the third addresses some men in the Corinthian congregation who so misunderstood their supposed spirituality that they thought they were free to frequent prostitutes, presumably on the ground that this involved merely the body.

In response to a written inquiry from the Corinthians (7:1), probably brought to Paul by Stephanas, Fortunatus, Achaicus (16:17), Paul sets himself to address the topic they raise. The first has to do with marriage and related matters (7:1-40). The second, dealing with food sacrificed to idols (8:1-11:1), is sometimes alleged to include one or two excursuses, but the general line of argument is fairly clear. In 8:1-13, Paul insists that divisions of opinion as to whether it is proper to eat food that has been sacrificed to idols must be resolved on the basis of self-sacrificial love, not claims to superior knowledge.

The Christians at Corinth had a lot going on with their lives. As we study through the book, we can see the challenges that they are dealing with. Many of these challenges are the very same in our world today. We can learn so much from our study of the church in Corinth.

For His Glory—Elvis Galbreath

- + Wes McIntyre's funeral will be here at the building Monday 11:00am. Visitation will be one hour before the funeral. There will be a meal after the funeral.
- + Jeff Boswell, a friend of Karen Metz, is still in OSU ICU. They are planning on surgery Monday.
- + † Andy Cordonier, was released from Encompass after therapy Saturday.
- + † Ronda's cousin's husband Mike has been discharged from OSU to an extended stay hotel. He has some health issues that require adjusting and close monitoring. He will be taking rehab to strengthen his lungs and heart. Thank You for all the prayers.
- + Ed White has they are going to start chemotherapy soon.
- + Vonda Shears is recovering from knee surgery.
- + Judy Erickson, Lisa Carpenter's stepmom, has breast cancer.
- + Doug Stephens had a procedure Monday. The tumor is too big to do laser surgery. They may try medication to get rid of it. Doug will see the doctor this week.
- + Please pray for Cali Kerns' great grandmother as she may have cancer
