Contents

Preface............................................................................................................................................ 7
1. Introduction .................................................................................................................................... 11
   1.1. Before Aksum and Kush ........................................................................................... 14
   1.2. The First Millennium BCE: A Turning Point in State Formation..................... 18
2. The Question of Aksumite Trade with Nubia................................................................. 25
3. The Third Century CE: Monumentum Adulitanum II (RIE 277) .................. 37
   3.1. Cosmas Indicopleustes at Adulis............................................................................... 38
   3.2. Dating Monumentum Adulitanum II ................................................................. 41
   3.3. Aksumite Expansion in Northeast Africa ....................................................... 44
       3.3.1. Aksum and Rome’s Southern Frontier ..................................................... 48
       3.3.2. Aksum and “Ethiopia”............................................................................ 52
       3.3.3. Sasu: A Scribal Error for Kush?............................................................... 53
       3.3.4. Aksum’s Northern and Western Frontiers in the Third Century......... 57
4. The Fourth Century CE: Aksum in Nubia ................................................................. 67
   4.1. Ousanas and Kush: RIE 186 ................................................................. 67
   4.2. Aksum Invades Kush: Two Greek Inscriptions from Meroë ...................... 71
       4.2.1. Dating RIE 286 and SNM 24841 ......................................................... 75
       4.2.2. The Political Implications of the First Aksumite Invasion of Kush.... 78
   4.3. Trouble on the Western Front? A Possible Clue in RIE 186............. 80
   4.4. The Noba: A New Force to be Reckoned With.............................................. 82
   4.5. 'Ēzānā’s Nubian War ............................................................................... 85
       4.5.1. The Greek Account: RIE 271 .............................................................. 86
       4.5.2. The Vocalized Ge’ez Account: RIE 189 ............................................. 99
           4.5.2.1. The Haughty Noba ...................................................................... 101
           4.5.2.2. Pillaging the Towns of the Noba .................................................. 106
           4.5.2.3. The Attack on Kush ..................................................................... 114
           4.5.2.4. Tallying Up the Spoils of War ...................................................... 122
       4.5.3. A Third Account of the Nubian War: RIE 190 .................................... 129
   4.6. Assessing the Impact of Aksum on Nubia in the Fourth Century .......... 135
       4.6.1. The Archaeological Evidence ............................................................. 136
       4.6.2. The Graeco-Roman Textual Evidence ............................................. 140
       4.6.3. The Fall of Kush: Was Aksum to Blame? .......................................... 143
5. After Kush: Aksum and Nubia in the Sixth Century CE ..........149
  5.1. Kālēb and Nubia: RIE 191.............................................................. 150
  5.2. The Nobades and Blemmyes: Would-be Mercenaries of Aksum?........158
  5.3. Longinus’ Mission and the Aksumite Presence in Alodia.................. 161
  5.4. Into the Middle Ages: Ḥaḍānī Dāne’ēl and Aksum’s Western Neighbors...163
6. Conclusion ..........................................................................................167
Bibliography......................................................................................... 173
Maps ........................................................................................................ 200
  Map 1. Northeast Africa in the third century CE.................................200
  Map 2. Northeast Africa in the fourth century CE...............................201
  Map 3. Northeast Africa in the sixth century CE.................................202
Index......................................................................................................203