Contents

Foreword by Ernest Wamba-dia-Wamba ix
Preface xiii
Acknowledgements xxvii

Introduction: Politics is thought, thought is real, people think 1

Part 1  Thinking political sequences:
From African history to African historical political sequences

1. Theoretical introduction: Understanding historical political sequences 37
2. From Saint-Domingue to Haiti:
The politics of freedom and equality, 1791–1960 69
3. Are those-who-do-not-count capable of reason?
On the limits of historical thought 94
4. The National Liberation Struggle mode of politics in Africa,
1945–1975 112
5. The People’s Power mode of politics in South Africa,
1984–1986 134
6. From national emancipation to national chauvinism in South Africa,
1973–2013 157
7. Rethinking militancy in the current sequence:
Beyond politics as agency 189
8. Understanding fidelity to the South African emancipatory event:
The Treatment Action Campaign and Abahlali baseMjondolo 222

Part 2 Opening up the thought of politics in Africa today:

9. Theoretical introduction: Social representation, modes of rule and political prescriptions 243

10. Marxism and the politics of representation: The ‘agrarian question’ and the limits of political economy – class, nation and the party-state 263

11. Thinking beyond representation, acting beyond representation:
Accounting for worker subjectivities in South Africa 309

12. Renaming the state in Africa today 358

13. Domains of state politics and systemic violence:
The concept of ‘uncivil society’ 400

14. The domain of civil society and its politics 447

15. The domain of traditional society and its politics 473

16. Towards a politics of solidarity: Feminist contributions 521

Conclusion: Reclaiming the domain of freedom 532

Bibliography 552

Index 593