 Like you jumped around a little with the EU soft/hard power card. I don't understand the link to their case.

no - I don't understand your framework, I hope you explain it.
 No - really well done on having a really well formatted block. That was pretty spicy.
 ac - super nice quantitative v. qualitative analysis. Incorporate it or else you needed a beautiful answer.

I would like both summaries to explain things more.

NS - hella... lol lol what I was gonna say sorry bud.

↳ So diction and speed are crucial.

• the aff's framework & connected all the points they were trying to make. And they are right to say that letting the BRI fail goes against the morality the neg speaks so frequently about.

• however, the Neg did make multiple points that weren't addressed by Aff (climate change)

Winner: Logan LV debating on the aff Side (Aff or Neg) Low point win? _____

Comments & Reason for Decision:

I feel aff has a better understanding of the topic as a whole. They explained arguments better, answered the line by line & had arguments that worked together.

Transparency. Neg didn't really address Neg kind of contradicted on arguments on climate change and finally they kept responding to arguments that weren't actually made

BUT all debaters were really good!

Neg wins on impacts. Aff didn't convincingly answer the coal argument or green tech existing outside of EU + did not provide an answer to China not complying. I didn't see the solvency for climate change on Aff. Reversion impact also wins → more money going to correct problems already in existence than BRI will solve for, plus nothing to show EU actually benefits.

→ plus the infrastructure argument turn was very convincing

Also, I didn't really get why the US increasing competition fits in → kind of got lost in climate change debate.

Everyone is very prepared and polished. But when you have 2/3 judges who asked for slower speech during paradigms, please actually slow down. Otherwise, why ask for paradigms?

You all also need to work on your poker faces. It's very off-putting when you make faces & roll your eyes when your opponents are speaking → borderline disrespectful

Everyone also had a great command of the room and what I based my vote on was articulated well on both sides.

Since I flow I don't write a ton of notes sorry :c

OK negs speeches were all SO GOOD (ff especially) all neg solvency could have come

*offensive use of opponents' evidence A++ From C2 pressure

I'd give you all perfect speaks if I could.

OK! so I buy neg on climate change. by EU makes china comply -> not in aff world!

aff can't solve for cc while also emitting so much coal. 1.1m die from coal in China. I get the wang ov. but BRI can't clearly solve (I don't buy trying to die but I do buy china dying out w/o funding) green energy isn't mutually exclusive to aff

2- recession: so I buy that china economically needs BRI bc of surplus/trade I get that. The Italy economic issue is hazy so I can't fairly weigh it. Climate mitigates econ growth bc it's expensive. The 900 m at risk is real I agree but I think climate wins on urgency. + aff didn't respond to ~~any~~ yen volatility so it's a wash on how "good" BRI economically would be. I couldn't weigh it.

each team did a great job providing adequate evidence to did a better job providing cold facts to back up their points.

had numbers to prove it.
