

Chamber Assignments & Judge Profiles

For chamber assignments, room numbers appear in the blue bar along with the chamber letter (A, B, C, D, E, F).

Judge assignments will be distributed at the 8 a.m. meeting in CB 238 (CB = Classroom Building).

Judge profiles received as of 4/26/2013 are included in this packet. Please note: not all judges listed with profiles may be used; not all judges used will be in the packet; we have tried to get as many as possible to submit their preferences. At the beginning of a session, students are always welcome to ask judges to introduce themselves and share their preferences.

NOTE that printed copies of this packet will NOT be made available. It is each school's responsibility to distribute this document to its squad.

Notes:

At this level of competition, I expect participants can give a 3 minute speech in their sleep. Therefore, clash and analysis become necessary to be well ranked. Also, do not take questioning lightly. If you have already spoken, this is your opportunity to point out any logical fallacies in other competitors remarks. If you do not point them out, I cannot judge on any fallacies I may, personally, see in their arguments.

Notes:

Evidence is necessary in Congress, unless we are hearing a crystallization speech.

Unsupported arguments carry little to no weight. Attitude is high on my list because I prefer to rank a student who is conscious of duty to the chamber as a whole legislator over a brilliant speaker who does nothing but prepare personal speeches. In recent years, a bombastic type of attitude in delivery has been both adopted and rewarded. I regard this as unfortunate, and won't reward it myself.

Extempore is important, but a debater who does not really understand the topic is usually exposed in questioning anyway. Questions, more often than not, indicate whether or not the speaker really understands the problem.

Notes:

I strive to judge holistically, considering all of the factors above. Analysis tops my list because when judging, I examine each argument for clarity, structure, warrants, and impacts. Clash is essential; speakers must advance the debate, not only by refuting but also by building on the arguments made by previous speakers on their side and by advancing the overall cause of their side. However, I do also pay attention to delivery--speeches should be speeches, not cases, and that means they should be smoothly delivered with sound rhetoric rhetoric throughout.

Notes:

Why evidence is ranked first: Last year I heard a speaker claim that Cuba had a special mineral that if mined and turned into medicine "would cut U.S. entitlement spending by up to 20%." No one called BS on this. Source-checking can't come to Congress too soon.
