Task Force releases report on proposed education reforms

Final report deals with residential education, MIT's worldwide impact, and possible new revenue streams

By Tushar Kamath
NEWS EDITOR

The Institute-wide Task Force on the Future of MIT Education, whose scope is as sweeping as it sounds, wants to rethink pedagogy at MIT and enable “modularity” and “flexibility” in courses.

The Task Force’s final report was released last month. Recommendations ranged from devising a new system of generating revenue for education to creating new special programs within the Institute such as the Undergraduate Teaching Opportunities Program (UTOP), modeled on the popular Undergraduate Research Opportunities Program (UROP).

In his charge, President L. Rafael Reif divided the Task Force into three working groups: the Working Group on MIT Education and Facilities for the Future, the Working Group on the Future Global Implications of edX and the Opportunities It Creates, and the Working Group on a New Financial Model for Education. These three groups were chaired by Professor Karen Willcox PhD ’00, Professor Sanjay E. Sarma, the Director of Digital Learning, and Executive Vice President and Treasurer Israel Ruiz GM ’01, respectively.

On MIT Education and Facilities for the Future

ing group outlined potential new programs that would respond to student input to the Task Force and carry out the fundamental mission of teaching and learning at MIT.

The UTOP is one program in the list of pilot projects relating to “shaping the future MIT graduate.” It would be part of a larger educational initiative that formalizes the opportunities that exist for teaching at MIT, including the MIT teaching certificate awarded by the Department of Urban Studies and Planning. This initiative “could become an intellectual home for programs around education which might include the certificates that exist al-

Market Basket workers cheer as feud ends and chief returns

Supermarket looks to rebuild after summer standoff

By Katharine Q. Seelye and Michael J. De La Merced

THE NEW YORK TIMES

After the intervention of two governors and an enormous public outcry, the chaos that has paralyzed the Market Basket supermarket chain ended Wednesday night with a deal between the two warring factions of the Demoulas family, the company said in a statement.

The deal approved by the chain’s board essentially meets the sole demand of the workers who have been staging huge public rallies for six weeks: that Arthur T. Demoulas, who was president until June, be reinstated to lead the company.

His cousin, Arthur S. Demoulas, and his allies agreed to sell their 50.5 percent stake in the company to Arthur T. Demoulas and his allies, who own 49.5 percent, according to the statement.

The price was more than $1.6 billion, which puts the value of the chain at about $3.2 billion, according to a person with knowledge of the agreement. That valuation may seem high given that the business has ground to a halt, but it reflects optimism that the employees can rebuild it.

As part of the deal, Arthur T. Demoulas will return immediately “with day-to-day operational authority,” according to the statement. But he will not technically become chief executive until the deal is finalized over the next several months.

The current co-chief executives, Felicia

Undergraduate alumni give twice as much to Annual Fund as graduate alumni

The MIT Annual Fund raised a total of $63.3 million in the 2014 fiscal year, which is an increase from the $57.9 million raised in fiscal 2013 and the $50.3 million raised in fiscal 2012.

Of the 2014 sum, MIT alumni donated $48.6 million. A total of 20,091 undergraduate alumni donated $33.1 million; some 12,400 graduate alumni donated $15.5 million.

Among undergraduate alumni, the class of 1964 was the top donor, giving a total of $1.5 million. The top gifts from graduate alumni came from graduates of the Sloan MBA and PhD Programs, raising a total of $4.9 million.

More than 330 companies matched

2,846 of the gifts from individual donors, bringing in a total of $1.9 million to the Annual Fund. The top two matching gifts were from The ExxonMobil Foundation, which gave $386,332, and the General Electric Foundation, which gave $194,820.

The Underclassmen Giving Campaign, consisting of donations from the students graduating in 2015, 2016, and 2017, raised $8,476 from 1,514 donors. The Senior Gift Campaign raised a total of $21,513 from 845 donors.

The MIT Annual Fund is tasked with encouraging annual giving among alumni, parents, students and friends of MIT.

FSILG leaders approve of new social gathering policy

Boston houses now allowed to host large events

By Austin Hess
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Interfraternity Council president Haldun Anil ’15 emailed MIT fraternity members late Thursday to announce that fraternity presidents had approved a new FSILG social events policy to address the assembly limits imposed by the Boston Licensing Board in October 2013, which had prevented fraternities in the city from holding parties. The announcement came within a day before the scheduled start of fraternity Rush, during which many houses host parties for freshmen.

The seven-page policy is the result of a new approach by the FSILG student leadership and MIT FSILG Office to allow houses in Boston to resume hosting large events, which was all but banned after fraternity assembly licenses were revoked in the wake of a four-story fall by a student at a party at the MIT fraternity Phi Sigma Kappa last September.

According to Anil, the City of Boston made

The comic strip consists of three panels. In the first panel, a male character with blonde hair and glasses, wearing an orange shirt and purple pants, holds a piece of paper. A speech bubble from him says, "Let's see what else is on your list of advice for dorm life... 'Keys can be lost or stolen!'". A female character with dark hair, wearing a green shirt and light blue pants, stands next to him. A speech bubble from her says, "For maximum security, replace your lock with a puzzle cube or keypad with a combination that changes each day!". The second panel has a purple background and features a calculator with a display showing '0.00'. A speech bubble above the calculator reads, "Today's code is the number of inches between our beds multiplied by the number of mice we found last week!". The third panel shows the same two characters. The male character has a speech bubble that says, "Who cares about compatible sleep schedules, personality, noise levels, or living styles?". The female character has a speech bubble that says, "Avoid turning your room into a cacophony of color by picking a roommate based on who has a matching bedspread!".

Understanding the power of art and architecture

The Tech talks to MIT Professor Azra Akšamija about her multi-disciplinary work

By Denis Bozic
ARTS EDITOR

Can art and architecture help heal cultural conflicts? Azra Akšamija PhD '11 explores the power of art and architecture in resolving conflicts and identifying contexts in which these conflicts can be analyzed and explored. Akšamija is an Assistant Professor at the Art, Culture and Technology (ACT) program and MIT's Department of Architecture, where she works as an artist and architectural historian in addition to teaching both undergraduate and graduate classes. She recently talked to The Tech about her origins, the ideas behind her projects, and her artistic vision of helping resolve the lingering conflicts in her native country, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

"I come from Sarajevo in Bosnia and Herzegovina. I lived there until I was fifteen, and then the [Bosnian] war started," says Akšamija. "No one could believe at the time that the war would come to Bosnia and Herzegovina. But, my father saw soldiers sieging the city, and said that the best way for us was to avoid the war and not be a part of it. So, we left to Germany first, and then to Austria and stayed there over the course of war."

Akšamija studied architecture at the Graz University of Technology, where she first started experimenting with art. "I was never really trained in art, but my work was very conceptual," she adds. "My first art work was my undergraduate thesis project, which was the discovery of this new wild-west city emerging in Bosnia and Herzegovina – a city called Arizona, which was really a market started by International Community and SFOR to promote community."

Arizona Market was created to foster communication between the three constituent nationalities of Bosnia and Herzegovina: Bosniaks, Serbs, and Croats. Even though the market was perceived by many as a safe haven for the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina, it was still a place of human trafficking, weapon trading, and drug dealing. "I mapped that market as an architect and I created an unusual intervention to counter what the government planned for the market, which was to erase it completely and build a shopping mall on top of it," says Akšamija. "I argued that even though that market was source of criminal activities, it was also the first place of communication where people in the middle of the war were meeting and talking. So, I designed what I call a provocative pole, an architectural intervention that's just punctual and that could give infrastructure to people like canalization and water, but at the same time introduce some form of regulation and slowly integrate the market to become an actual city." Akšamija's conceptual undergraduate thesis project launched her into the world of art, and she continued with her education and obtained a Masters in Architecture from Princeton University, after which she earned her PhD degree from MIT. In 2011, Akšamija became a faculty member at MIT, where she continued to explore the mutual influence between architecture and culture. Despite her clear vision about the future of her work, she admits that MIT has had an important influence on her projects.

Fraternity, Sorority, and

Independent Living Group Rush 2014

Welcome to the Daily Confusion for FSILG Rush 2014!

Greek and ILG life are huge on MIT’s campus, and while they may not be right for everyone, many people cite their affiliations as a key piece of what makes their MIT experience so fun and valuable.

Contained within these pages are hundreds of events for Rush and Recruitment. Sorority Recruitment and Fraternities start on this page, and Independent Living Groups start on page 11. A map of MIT and all of the FSILG living groups is on page 13.

Guides provided at tomorrow’s Kresge Kickoff, the official kickoff of Rush, will provide more detail on the events. We hope you can use this to start planning out your schedule over the next few action-packed days. Be sure to explore as many places as possible, enjoy some delicious free food, and have lots of fun!

Sorority Recruitment

Welcome Brunch and Philanthropy Day

Saturday, August 30th, 9:30am-5pm, Lobdell, W20 Second Floor

Wondering about sororities at MIT and how the recruitment process works? Come to the Welcome Brunch to sign up for recruitment and learn why so many talented undergraduate women have chosen to Go Greek! After the Welcome Brunch, you will have the chance to learn about each sorority’s house and philanthropy program. The first day of recruitment begins right after the Welcome Brunch in the morning. Lunch and an optional dinner will be provided. Recruitment will continue on Sunday, August 31st and will conclude on Monday, September 1st.

Feud at New England grocery chain ends with deal

Arthur T. Demoulas, fired president seen as ally of workers, is reinstated after protests

Thornton and James Gooch, who were installed by Arthur S. Demoulas, will “remain in place” until the deal closes, the announcement said.

It was the firing of Arthur T. Demoulas and the installation of Thornton and Gooch that touched off protests by employees in mid-July. The deal includes penalties and incentives intended to get Arthur T. Demoulas to finalize the transaction by the end of February.

The settlement would end one of the strangest labor actions in U.S. business history, one that disrupted a low-priced grocery chain that attracted 2 million shoppers in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine. And perhaps most surprising, it ends with the sole demand of the workers, from top management to the lowliest clerks, being met.

The settlement would end one of the strangest labor actions in U.S. business history, one that disrupted a low-priced grocery chain that attracted 2 million shoppers in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine

“This show of group solidarity achieved what the employees and customers asked for,” said Christopher Mackin, a lecturer at Rutgers School of Management and Labor Relations. “This is unheard-of in corporate America. It’s like 1776 — we get to pick who governs us.”

The protests left store shelves bare. Shoppers, in solidarity with employees, boycotted the chain. The company started losing millions of dollars a week, and analysts questioned whether it could be salvaged.

Arthur T. Demoulas, who long presented himself as an ally to workers, was elevated to cult status as employees carried posters with his picture, calling him “our one true leader” and demanding his reinstatement.

As employees and customers held ever bigger and more boisterous rallies, in the boardroom the family factions appeared stuck. As the stalemate continued, Gov. Deval Patrick of Massachusetts and Gov. Maggie Hassan of New Hampshire waded into the fight. Although Market Basket is a private company, they said a successful resolution was in the public interest.

The buyout process was supervised by the three independent directors — Keith Cowan, Eric Gebaide and Ron Weiner — of Market Basket’s seven-member board. Among the biggest issues was what role Arthur T. Demoulas would play after the announcement of a deal and before the actual closing, with a so-called interim operating agreement among the major sticking points.

Thomas A. Kochan, a professor of work and employment research with the Sloan School of Management at MIT, said the episode showed that “the employees are the most valuable asset in this business.”

It showed, too, that the employee action resonated.

“A lot of people could relate, and they applauded when they saw these employees standing up to save their business and save the business model,” he said.

“Market Basket has done more to educate us on how to manage a business than any business case study that’s been written to date,” he said.

Report recommends changes be made to the GIR structure

Emphasis placed on flexibility in MIT common core

ready, a new masters program that’s being launched, to less formal teaching opportunities,” stated Willcox.

Another new program proposed by the working group is the Undergraduate Service Opportunities Program (USOP). The program was conceived as a formal way for students to work with faculty members to combine service with their educational experiences.

‘One of the things that’s changed is students’ interest in global service. There just seems to be a growing demand.’

Willcox explained, “One of the things that’s changed is students’ interest in global impact and service ... there just seems to be a growing demand. We have some fabulous programs on campus already in various places like D-Lab and MISTI. To think about creating a program that’s more of an integrated part of the academic experience ... seems like it would be favorable.”

Apart from the UTOP and USOP, Willcox’s group examined the need to improve the GIR system and introduce more flexibility in the common core of MIT’s education. Willcox also noted the struggle of making sure freshmen still receive a great MIT education in the face of possible failures in the experimental GIR classes.

On the Future Global Implications of edX and the Opportunities It Creates Sarma’s working group, on the future global implications of edX, paid particular attention to increasing the reach of MIT’s educational impact. The Task Force looked to modularity and blended learning to achieve this goal.

While not giving specific ways to alleviate diversity concerns, the Task Force recognizes that certain demographics (women and students with less than a secondary education) are underrepresented in MITx courses. In the long term, the Task Force hopes to “design a system of accountability to ensure that its outreach strategy is continuously practiced and revised.”

The Task Force also hopes to broaden the areas that MITx covers. Citing the example of ChicagoX, an experiment where MIT alumni taught computer science MITx courses in urban Chicago, the report encourages more student engagement between the MIT community and the world.

On a New Financial Model for Education

This part of the Task Force report noted the change in the “campus revenue mix” as a reason to create new revenue streams for the Institute. Given the inflating cost of a college education, the Task Force looked to increasing the affordability and access of an MIT education.

Such changes require “increases in undergraduate class size so that more students can experience the rich magic of an MIT residential education” and “faculty growth required to accommodate the needs of a growing student body.”

In order to offset the outlays associated with the expansion of the student and faculty body, the report provided a couple of recommendations that would be pursued by an ad hoc working group. Among these recommendations are the enhancing of the mission of MIT’s Technology Licensing Office (TLO) and the creation of an MIT venture fund used to support student and faculty.

Ruiz said that while MIT’s revenue model will be largely unchanged from the standard revenue mix in the near term, Ruiz’s group also proposed extending “MIT’s access and engagement opportunities via new types of certifications” like MITx and XSeries certificates to generate more revenue for the Institute.

Max occupancy increases with new social policy

Student leaders and administrators’ successfully pursue new strategy for policy approval

it clear that it did not want to reinstate the licenses, the traditional justification for fraternities exceeding their residency limits during large events, because he said the city viewed assembly licenses as the sole domain of commercial operations.

The policy’s changes fall into three sections. The first redefines the maximum number of people who can be at an FSILG during various types of events. The second introduces a new registration system for events. The third enacts new procedures to enforce compliance with MIT and FSILG policies by introducing Risk Management Consultants, members of third-party FSILGs sent to inspect registered events.

Each house’s occupancy was limited to its maximum residency since the revocation of the assembly licenses. Now, for social events with alcohol, the upper limit is the minimum of the house’s maximum occupancy as per state building code or 249 people, whichever is less. Exceeding that limit now requires municipal registration of the event.

While the policy also applies to independent living groups and sororities, Anil said that the details of the policy primarily address concerns related to the types of social events most commonly held by fraternities.

Anil said that the student leaders and administrators working on the issue shifted away from license renewal in late May after multiple failed attempts to receive approval from Boston, which indicated its opposition to giving assembly licenses for non-commercial purposes. “The MIT community has decided to enforce the safety of social events ourselves rather than relying on numbers determined by the city,” he said, calling the new rules a “common sense approach.”

Fraternities were sent drafts of the policy about two weeks ago and told to prepare for Rush in both the case of its approval and the case in which large gatherings at Boston houses were not allowed. The approval came with all but one fraternity president voting in favor.

Anil was unsure of the specific legal details that allow the policy to overcome the limits that had been in place throughout the academic year and said that to his knowledge the City of Boston had not yet reviewed or commented on the policy.

Say hello!
