First of all, the app is no longer the same as it was in the past, it no longer transfers you to the Google Play Store, now if you search for any app, you are given the possibility to download the application in APK format (the same way we do it in Downgen) without going to the store. Secondly, it has changed its way of downloading apps, now you have to collect points (you get 100 points when downloading apps) to download some important games or apps, anyway we found that there is an old version of Mobogeny that you can use in the same old way without the need to collect points. It's something to watch out for as well, because it's a problem with intrusive ads. This will open them in your browser without your permission. They have a different focus, where they will allow third parties to start selling apps at their stores. It is ideal for new developers who want to go on the market. Aptoids are reduced when it comes to utilities such as file management and navigation. It also doesn't have the ability to back up your content as Mobo does. They are quite different app stores. The aptoid has better features for developers, while Momozzini focuses on utility for the user. While it has some downside with its intrusive ads, the benefits are worth the issues it brings. Everything is safe and secure. The application makes your phone very easy to use.
