The BJP became one of the largest parties in the House and surpassed expectations of winning 303 seats, with its alliance partners bringing the NDA a total of 353 seats. [1] The reasons for the victory were the personal popularity of Narendra Modi, the effective turnout of the NDA institution, the wave of public nationalism following the Attack on Pulwama, the consolidation of Hindu voters in a multi-party coalition and the successful implementation of social welfare programmes during Modi's first term. [2] The counting of votes took place on 23 May 2019 and was completed the following day. [3] Initial returns showed the BJP leading in all 303 constituencies it eventually won, and opposition leader Rahul Gandhi conceded defeat against the official certification of most of the results. [4] With results, the BJP was able to take 21 seats in the House in 2014. India won 282 seats in the general election. [5] [6] It was the second time in India's independent history that voters re-elected the same party to power by a larger majority in Lok Sabha, India's lower house of parliament. The overall share of the BJP's vote was 37.4%, an increase of more than 6 percentage points from 31.34% in 2014. The National Democratic Alliance secured a share of 45% of the vote, compared with 38% in 2014. Indian voters decided to vote for None of the above (NOTA) in the 2019 elections, while Bihar led 2.08% of NOTA voters. [9] Modi was re-elected prime minister with the largest voting share in history (+6.02%) [7] His opponent, Rahul Gandhi, ran into two constituencies, won from Wayanad, but lost out of the Amethi constituency - the seat he had, his mother (Sonia Gandhi), his father (Rajiv Gandhi), and his uncle (Sanjay Gandhi) had collectively held for decades. In addition, many candidates who were members of popular political dynasties were defeated across India in favor of the BJP or other party candidates. [10] [11] [12] The elections were called a referendum on the policies and promotion of Hindu nationalist policies and advocacy by Modi and the BJP. [13] [14] According to The Wall Street Journal, Modi's victory sets (sic) stage for further economic change in one of Asia's fastest growing economies. [5] In an article published by Alasdair Pall and Mayank Bhardwaj, the result was a mandate to pursue business-friendly policies and national security positions, strengthening the global trend of right-wing populists sweeping to victory, from the United States to Brazil and Italy, often after adopting tough positions on protectionism, immigration and defense. [15] According to a sample analysis of the data, the ruling party's victory was wide, acquiring seats in many parts of the country and in rural and urban exclusions, consolidating its pole position in Indian politics. However, according to this survey of around 140 constituencies, the BJP seems to be more popular and successful in urban and metropolitan constituencies than in rural and semi-urban constituencies. The BJP was elected in all income groups, claims the Mint. The newspaper added: In constituencies with many planned caste and planned tribes (SCs/STs), the BJP is more popular than other countries, but in constituencies with a large number of Muslims, it is less popular. [16] According to India today, detailed accounts and reports show that the country's overall growth was not one of the most important factors that helped Narendra Modi's party cruise to a landslide victory in elections and that the government was able to successfully implement schemes that directly affect the rural population.
