It's like a blessing from heaven," said Andrea, who came from Guatemalatwo decades ago and lives in a three-bedroom Plant City mobile home with her seven children, ages 1 to 19. "I have always worked hard to support my children, but the money is hardly enough for us.

Andrea has no Social Security card, normally required to pay taxes. But five years ago, she obtained an Individual Taxpayer Identification Number through a program created by the Internal Revenue Service. Andrea will receive $1,650 per month from July through December, a total of $9,900. It breaks down to $720 for her three children under 6. She is not eligible to receive a credit for her oldest child.

The expanded child tax credit is part of the Biden administration's American Rescue Plan, passed by Congress in March. The White House hopes to make the credit permanent.

People are especially welcome now to Andrea, coming as it does at a time to recover from the economic hardships of the coronavirus pandemic.

A year ago, Andrea lost her job selling food to farmworkers. For a couple of months, she relied on bags of food donated by charities to feed her kids.

Is a marijuana monopoly growing in Florida?

A hedge fund that wants to extend its holdings to a second company could view this move as a threat.
