SYNOPSIS

PELÉ tells the miraculous story of the legendary soccer player’s rise to glory from a young boy, to the 17 year old who scored the winning goal in Brazil’s first ever World Cup victory in 1958. From a life full of disadvantages and an impoverished youth in Brazil, Pelé used his unorthodox yet authentic style of play and his unbeatable spirit to overcome all odds, find greatness and inspire a country that he changed forever.

LONG SYNOPSIS

Born EDSON ARANTES DO NASCIMENTO, but nicknamed DICO by his parents, the man that football fans around the world would forever come to know as PELÉ grows up in the poor Brazilian village of Bauru. After Brazil’s devastating loss in the 1950 World Cup final, a devastated nine-year-old young Dico makes the bold and unlikely promise to his father that someday he will go on to win a World Cup for Brazil. Dico grows up helping his father in his janitorial duties at the local clinic every day after school to help his family get by. One day Dico joins his mother to work cleaning the house of a wealthy factory owner, and overhears their son JOSÉ and his friends discussing a local youth football tournament and a famous professional scout that will be in attendance. When Dico mispronounces the name of a locally known goalkeeper, José and his friends make fun of him, nicknaming him “PELÉ”, a name he initially loathes. Dico convinces his friends to enter the tournament, where they do well and make it to the final game, only to face Jose and his friends. They lose the final, but only after a dramatic comeback to almost tie the game thanks to Dico’s showcase of incredible skill and embrace of Ginga: the joy and spirit of the Brazilian people. After the tournament, the professional scout makes Dico an offer to try out for Santos FC, a professional soccer club. The Pelé name follows him as he travels to Santos, Brazil, where he moves up through the youth squad to the reserve squad and eventually works his way up to the professional level team. His unorthodox Ginga style of play is of great concern to his coaches, but they can’t argue with results as he leads the team to several victories. At age 16, Dico gets a most unlikely call to join the Brazilian national team for the 1958 World Cup, where he learns that he’ll have to compete for a starting position with a new hotshot player - none other than his childhood rival José. Competition for starting positions and style of play is intense, and Dico injures his knee during a practice, with everyone fearing that he will have to be sidelined from the entire tournament. But it is too late to replace him, and he travels with the team to Sweden for the 1958 World Cup. José is chosen to start while Dico undergoes treatment for his knee injury, and Brazil just barely progresses on from the elimination group stage. Just as Dico is cleared to play, José suffers an injury, and Dico replaces him in the starting team. Brazil barely makes it past the USSR and onto the semifinal with France. At halftime, with the game tied, José reveals to Dico that he is in fact not injured, but that he took himself out of the game so that Dico could play, having finally realized that the Brazilian team must be proud of who they are and embrace the “Ginga” style of play, reminding Dico of the way he displayed a few years earlier at the youth tournament. Bolstered by José’s support, an inspired Dico scores three goals and leads Brazil past France and onto the World Cup final. In spite of overwhelming odds against them, Brazil rallies behind Dico and the Ginga style, and beats home team favorite Sweden in a stunning upset. Playing this unique and breathtaking style, for which football would forever become known as “the beautiful game”, and led by Dico, now known as Pelé, Brazil wins its first ever World Cup and becomes the first nation to ever win a World Cup while playing outside of its own continent. A legend is born!
ABOUT PELE

On October 23, 1940 in Três Corações, a city in the Minas Gerais state of Brazil, a legend was born. Today, in a world of 7 billion people, soccer is the foremost sport and Pelé (Edson Arantes do Nascimento) remains at the center of “the beautiful game” — where he is universally recognized, respected and revered in every corner of the globe.

Pelé started his professional career at the age of 16 for Santos Futebol Clube, a club he stayed with for nearly two decades. In 1958, he won his first World Cup for Brazil at age 17 – the youngest winner ever, which still stands to this day. He went on to win another two World Cups in 1962 and 1970, making him the only person in the world with three Jules Rimet trophies to his name. Not only is Pelé the all-time leading scorer of Santos FC and the Brazil National Team, but he is the all-time leading scorer in the history of the sport (1283 goals in 1366 matches).

In 1974, Pelé came out of semi-retirement to sign with the New York Cosmos for the 1975-1977 seasons and led his team to the 1977 NASL championship. Not only did he help introduce the sport to the United States, but he also won the hearts of American sports fans with this style and grace both on and off the pitch. After his final career match on October 1, 1977 in front of more than 75,000 fans at Giants Stadium, Pelé shouted, “Love! Love! Love!” and urged his audience to pay attention to the youth of the world.

Pelé will never forget where he came from and has a never-ending desire to give back.

From his humble beginnings, to his unmatched athletic feats, to his post-career influence and impact on every continent – Pelé lives with great honor and pride of his birthplace (Três Corações means Three Hearts) in that, “Where I was born, where I grew up and where I played football – they have given me three hearts too.”

Named one of the “Top 20 Most Important People of the 20th Century” (Time Magazine), “Football Player of the Century” (FIFA), and recipient of the Ballon d'Or Prix d'Honneur trophy which was specifically created for him - Pelé today maintains his commitment to the sport and to society by fulfilling various roles as spokesperson, ambassador and philanthropist.

Rodrigo also starred in Hemingway and Gelhorn opposite Nicole Kidman and Clive Owen, which premiered on HBO. Heleno, the fascinating true life story of Brazilian soccer star Heleno de Frietas in which Rodrigo stars and also produced, recently sold to HBO for U.S. distribution after its premiere at the 2011 Toronto Film Festival. He was awarded the Best Actor award for this film at the 2012 Lima International Film Festival. He also received the Best Actor award at the 2011 Havana Film Festival. The movie had its U.S. premiere at the Miami Film Festival. Rodrigo starred in the world wide smash animated Fox feature hit Rio that had a box office gross of $486,000,000 worldwide. He also appeared on the December 2011 cover of VOGUE- the first male in the history of the magazine to do so.

Production Information

It is rare for two legends from two different worlds to join forces in the telling of a single story. In 2012, the greatest soccer player in history tapped one of Hollywood’s most iconic and celebrated producers to tell his story. Brian Grazer’s Imagine Entertainment has long been responsible for crowd-pleasing and award winning films, including, as it turns out, several of Pelé’s all-time favorite films. So when Pelé and his team at Legends 10 looked to add a feature film of his life story to his legacy project (which also includes the re-launch of the documentary Pele Eterno, as well as the publication of his autobiographical book Why Soccer Matters), Pelé immediately approached Imagine Entertainment. Brian Grazer and his team at Imagine had long felt that Pele’s story, one of the most inspiring sports stories of all time, deserved a life on the big screen. Once the two modern icons connected, there was no question that this would result in a great storytelling adventure!

In partnership with Legends 10, Imagine Entertainment recruited the young writer/director team, Jeffrey and Michael Zimbalist to scribe the screenplay and helm the film project. Their successful background in documentary films where they previously had explored soccer as well as Brazil and Brazilian culture, would ensure the film would have a unique perspective and truthful tone. After months of interviews with Pelé and his close friends and family, the first draft of a screenplay emerged.

The partnership grew with the addition of Peruvian producer Ivan Orlic. Originally from Peru, Orlic grew up playing, living and breathing soccer, and of course surrounded by stories about the legendary soccer player. The opportunity to be a part of the telling of his idol’s story was as irresistible as the opportunity to work with Imagine Entertainment, the company responsible for many of his favorite films and television
After a few weeks in additional development in collaboration with Orlic’s Seine Pictures, the final screenplay was approved and embraced unanimously, and Orlic was able to arrange for the film to be financed and “green-lit”.

Grazer, Pelé, Orlic and the filmmakers met in Cannes to announce the project to the global marketplace in partnership with international sales agent Exclusive Media. The project was met with great enthusiasm, and the filmmaking team quickly proceed to the next phase: to build the production and creative team charged with telling the Pele story.

An incredibly experienced and accomplished creative team was assembled, including Academy Award nominee Matthew Libatique as director of photography, renowned production designer and art director Dominic Watkins, award-winning casting director Mary Vernieu, PGA Award winning line producer Colin Wilson, some of Hollywood’s most exciting editors in Luis Carballar and Glen Scantlebury, and Academy Award winning composer A.R. Rahman, who’s musical score truly brings the film to life.

Casting the role of Pelé would require two actors (one to play him at age 9 and a second to play him at ages 16-17), who would not only have a similar physical appearance to the legendary player, but also possessed extraordinary natural talents for both soccer and performance. In addition to being English speakers, of course! This casting effort proved to every bit the challenge that one would expect it to be, and to rise up to that challenge the producers and casting directors organized one of the largest casting endeavors in recent film history. Production set up casting offices in London as well as in several cities in the United States, South Africa, and of course, Brazil. Actors were brought in from all walks of life, whether they be trained actors, experienced soccer players, or charismatic school kids. First to be cast was a young boy from Brazil to play 9-year old Pelé: Leonardo Lima Carvalho, whose magnetic on-camera presence and natural charisma were immediately reminiscent of the legend himself.

The search for a 16-year-old Pelé for the character of “Older Dico”, however, was even more difficult. Where some actors had the requisite resemblance, they were often lacking either the soccer ball or the language skills, and conversely those who had the necessary skills lacked the resemblance. Desperate to find the perfect actor for this role, the filmmakers and casting directors took to the streets and even beaches of Rio, where locals are known to regularly demonstrate their soccer skills, tricks and elaborate juggling techniques. One day, when reviewing a video of several young men playing soccer near the beach, the directors a young man in the background of the clips with a strong resemblance to Pelé. He had not been the intended subject of the video clip, but the uncanny resemblance and demonstrated soccer skills were undeniable.

Immediately, they set out to the beaches, but only to find that the group of young men had already dispersed and left. Believing that they had found the perfect actor to play Pele, the directors returned to the beach the following day to discover a semi-professional team playing a match on a field near the beach. As they watched the game, they noticed something amazing—the young man they had seen in the yesterday’s video was playing on the semi-pro team! After the game, they approached the young man and asked him to audition for the role, Kevin de Paula gave a phenomenal audition despite having no previous acting experience: he possessed Pelé’s energy, heart, and playing skills. The filmmakers had found their Pelé!

Both the producers and the filmmakers describe the film as a love-letter not just to the legendary player and his legacy, but also to his home country and culture. In order to maintain the integrity and authenticity of the story, it was decided that the film would be shot entirely in Brazil, which also offered the filmmaker the opportunity to showcase the natural beauty of the country, its people, and their culture. This decision also presented the team with the challenges of a language barrier, a different industry culture, and different local laws and regulations, in addition to the challenges of producing a period piece, with the intellectual property issues of a film based on a true story, and the added complications of both crowds and choreographies for the soccer sequences. To navigate the process, producers Ivan Orlic and Colin Wilson traveled to Brazil several months in advance of principal photography to begin to assemble the local partners and crew that would be necessary to overcome all the challenges ahead. Inspired at every turn by the story they were making possible to be told, they were able to do just that.

Perhaps the most impressive aspect of working in Brazil was the dedication of the local people. And as production moved forward, the Brazilian crew’s talent became undeniable. Hundreds of people joined the effort, with local hiring and local casting. Casting locally also gives the film an authentic feel and was one of the great ways in which this film serves as a love letter to the people of Brazil. The dedication of the cast and crew to this film and this story is what truly allowed the artists to elevate the film in service of the legacy of the legend whose story it tells.
