

Dr. Adam Parrillo

Dr. Adam Parrillo is the Dean for the School of Business and Applied Technologies at Clark State College. Dr. Parrillo has broad experience in higher education, including faculty roles in community college, university, and graduate programs, and multiple administrative positions. He currently oversees applied programs in business, computer science, agriculture, engineering technology, and trades. As the lead administrator, he is accountable for program management, policy implementation, building relationships, and representing the school's and college's interests. Dr. Parrillo has successfully coordinated efforts between the Department of Labor H1B One Workforce grant and the MITS-TO9 ARCTOS project, managed Ohio Department of Higher Education's Short-term Certificate grants, and led search committees for a host of positions. Formally trained in the social geography of economic development, he incorporates this expertise and related analytical abilities into his administrative work.
