United Way goes beyond responding to immediate needs. We’re helping people recover. We’re a vital force in building strong, equitable, and resilient communities where everyone can thrive.

It’s especially important in education. Even before the pandemic, unequal access to high-quality education had created an achievement gap.

United Way is working to reverse these trends and improve education for everyone—everywhere. Across our global network of 1,100 United Ways, education is our No. 1 focus area. United Ways are working to improve early childhood education, early grade reading, middle school success, high school graduation, and access to and graduation from college—especially for low-income youth of color.

With the help of our partners—including 45,000 companies across the globe—we’re offering hope and help where it’s needed the most. In the last year alone, United Way impacted 48 million people, including:

- 708,011 children enrolled in high-quality early education programs
- 1.2 million families who were given educational resources and training
- 2.3 million youth who got academic enrichment with after-school programs

As the world’s largest privately funded nonprofit, United Way is at work in 95% of the U.S. and across 37 countries and territories. We take community-building seriously, but we do it with a global reach and hyper-local focus. We help people invest in local solutions, bringing people together — though charitable giving, volunteerism or public policy advocacy — to make life better for our neighbors.

Together, we can Live United.
