Course Description

Everyone seems to be talking about implicit bias and diversity. Implicit bias is the attitudes or stereotypes that affect an individual's understanding, actions, and decisions in an unconscious manner. Businesses offer training on it, politicians support it, the media extols it. But what exactly is implicit bias and diversity? Unfortunately, some real estate agents let their biases get in the way of working with people from diverse cultures. However, successful licensees realize that working with people from diverse cultural backgrounds creates an opportunity for business and possibly personal relationships.

Biases, preferences, attitudes, stereotypes, and prejudices are all examples of psychological constructs. Psychological constructs are mental associations that can influence a person's behavior and feelings toward an individual or group. If the person is unaware of these mental associations, the biases, preferences, attitudes, stereotypes, or prejudices are said to be implicit.

Having biases or preconceived feelings is normal human behavior. Everyone has biases of one kind or another. It's okay to have different likes and dislikes. Biases are harmless as long as they are about unimportant things, like preferring Pepsi over Coke (or vice-versa for you Coke lovers). But when we hold prejudices against other people, and then act on those prejudices in an illegal discriminatory way, we create all kinds of problems.

Upon time expiration, the exam is graded as-is, and the student will receive the results immediately. If you do not pass the first exam attempt, you may review the course again and make a second attempt, but you will not get credit for the course until you successfully pass the exam. The final exam questions are randomly selected from a pool of questions. After a second failed attempt you will be re-enrolled in the course and you will need to go through the course again and pass the course final exam in order to receive credit.
