What happened when you reported to the scene and included a detailed chronology narrative of story telling from your perspective. 1 use to explain who, what, when, where, and why of the event. [7] [8] For example, an officer's report might say: Upon arrival, I saw a 40-year-old white male shouting and shouting at a 35-year-old white woman, known as Jane Doe, on the lawn in front of 123 Maple Street. I separated both the parties involved and conducted field interviews. I was told by Mr Johnny that he had come home from work and found out that the dinner was not ready. He then said he was upset at his wife, Mrs Jane, for not having dinner ready for him. 2 Include a bumper detail in your report. If possible, be sure to include quotes directly from witnesses and others involved in the incident. Include the exact details of your role during what happened. If you had to use physical force to detain someone, don't gloss over it. Report how you handled the situation and then. Follow your department's protocol regarding reporting on witnesses and evidence. [9] [10] Use specific details. For example, I found him inside and detained him, instead of writing something like that, I arrived on Everest in 2005 at 12:05. I went home and knocked the door. I tried the knob and found it to be open... Use 3 diagrams. If it is difficult to explain some information in words then create a picture or diagram in your report. You can also use a picture or diagram to show what the scene of the event looks like. [11] [12] Police officers often have to write reports about auto accidents. It may be very clear to describe with a picture or a picture how the accident occurred. You can take a picture of the road and use the arrows to show how each car was going on hitting each other. 4 Create the full report. Write as much as possible and include as many details as you want. Do not leave room for people reading reports to interpret something incorrectly. Don't worry about your report being too long or vocabulary. The important thing is to report a full picture of what happened. For example, when I came, his face was red, you could say, when I came, he was screaming, out of breath, his face was red, and he seemed angry. The second example is better than ever because there are many reasons why someone's face is red, not just that they are angry. 5 Include the exact details and leave the rest. If you didn't see anything, make sure you don't report that you did. If a witness tells you something you didn't see, whatever witness says is considered a rumor. Rumour is something you hear that you cannot prove with personal knowledge. Rumor reports as rumoured, not something as you personally saw. [15] [16] Even though it's rumored, be sure to write what everyone at the scene told you. This can be important, even if it is lying. Include any information about the witness's behavior, in case what he said or he made you controversial. 6 Use clear language. Don't use flowers, misleading language to describe what happened. Your writing should be clear and concise. Do not use legal or technical terms. Use short, to-the-point, fact-oriented sentences that do not leave room for interpretation. [17] [18] Use party names when possible, so you can avoid confusion when talking about many people. Also, spell abbreviations. For example, say individual vehicles instead of P.O.V. (Personally owned vehicle), and the crime scene is instead a police term for Code 11, which is on the scene. 7 Be honest. Even if you're not proud of how you handled the situation, it's important that you write an honest account. If you write something untrue it can end surfacing later, endangering your job and creating problems for those involved in the event. [19] [20] Defend your integrity and the institution represented by telling you the truth. The truth.
