You may have noticed that VaNews looks a little different, and hopefully is easier to read.

The clips now begin with the seven most important and interesting headlines. If you just need the basics, you can stop there. If you would like more coverage, you can keep scrolling.

The improvements to VaNews are the first result of a new Strategic Plan that the VPAP Board of Directors approved in December.

One focus will be improving the user experience. We’re mindful that people are increasingly time challenged. And we want to make sure that our unique data is relevant and understandable to a broad audience – from those who do politics for a living to those who are just now tuning in.

The VPAP team is excited to begin implementing our new strategic vision. I encourage you to read the plan for yourself and let us know what you think.

On behalf of the VPAP Board, I would like to thank the more than 1,300 companies, groups and individuals who invest in our nonpartisan mission. Your generous support helps elevate public understanding of Virginia government and politics.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey M. Britt

I love @vpapupdates!

I'm just a campaign staffer, more excited for the release of campaign reports on @vpapupdates than my own salary check.

I clearly miss @vpapupdates, from the bottom of my campaign finance report reading heart.

Virginia reporters: Don't take that website for granted. I didn't know how good I had it until it was irrelevant to me.

Quick shoutout to my friends @vpapupdates who have the best, easiest to read tally of the vote totals.

I use @vpapupdates all the time. The government site can be so crammed with info that it's hard to navigate. VPAP makes it simple. They won't have everything session related, but they have the bills so you can ⭐ educate yourself ⭐ I love VPAP so much ❤️❤️

I just need to say that Virginia Public Access Project (@vpapupdates) is the best website in state politics and WE NEED THIS FOR ALL 50 STATES!
