Throughout the Minneapolis Sculpture Garden, hundreds of native trees, shrubs, perennial plants, and grasses not only create a natural frame for the art but also offer a thriving habitat for birds, butterflies, and other wildlife. This dynamic environment supports the long-term stability of the site, which is one of the crown jewels of the city's park system.