The Kissing Booth

bum!” and “She tasted like Cheetos.” As for the script’s content, I’m not going to pass moral judgments here, because when I was in high school I loved raunchy teen fare like “Porky’s” and “Fraternity Vacation.” But I’m sure some parents will object to scenes that place Elle drunk and table-dancing at a party, cavorting in the boy’s locker room at school, and -- wow! -- there’s the amount of sex (mostly off-screen) she and Flynn have once they finally get together.

The second problem is the fact that Elordi is at least a good foot taller than King, and the filmmakers do NOTHING to alleviate the height disparity like ... oh, I don’t know ... put Elle in heels just once. So, at numerous points, the two can’t physically appear in the same shot together.
But the biggest of the three problems is how much Flynn is an absolutely monstrous, controlling jerk of a guy. There is no way -- No W-A-A-A-Y! -- this guy could get away with the things he does in this flick where Elle is concerned if he looked like ... well, me back in high school. In fact, there would probably be a restraining order in place and a lengthy suspension at the very least. The dude beats the Hell out of at least two guys who come on to Elle. He also criticizes a short skirt Elle wears and tells her that girls who dress like that are “asking for it.” He threatens other guys behind her back NOT to ask her out even before he shows any interest in her. He makes out with another girl in front of her at a party. At one point, he orders her onto his motorcycle when she’s trying to get away from him ... and she agrees!

Oh yeah. Elle forgives all throughout especially when Flynn is shirtless. And when she calls him on his violent tendencies, Flynn admits he has gone to counseling for his anger issues. But he stopped the sessions because he came to the realization that “that’s just how I’m wired.” And she accepts that! The actual final line of the film is Elle, in voiceover narration, saying, “I know there is part of me that is always going to belong to Noah Flynn!”
At the end, Maddie and I shared a nice, big, collective “Ewww!”
