Remembering Movie Star (and Cousin) Burt Reynolds

By Teddy Durgin
Special to the Examiner

The world lost Burt Reynolds on Thursday, Sept. 6 ... and so did my family. In all of my years of writing a movie review column, I don't think I've ever mentioned that the great star of "Smokey and the Bandit," "Deliverance," and "Boogie Nights" was my cousin. My great-grandfather's sister, Fern, was Burt's mother. My great-grandma used to baby-sit him when he was a tyke. Years later, when he became a Hollywood leading man, he escorted my grandma and mother to the Washington, D.C., premiere of "100 Rifles" in 1969 where they also got to meet Raquel Welch and Jim Brown.

Did I know the man? No. My grandma stayed in touch with his mom for a number of years. But Burt definitely went Hollywood. I only spoke to him once over the phone when he was in D.C. years ago to receive an award at the old Touchdown Club (he had been a running back for Florida State University in the 1950s before ripping up his knee). The conversation was brief. At first, he was on the defensive, thinking my grandma and I had only dialed him up to get free tickets to the event. We had no interest (OK, of course we did). When he realized we weren't hitting him up for anything, he was pretty cool, even chatty. The highlight for me was personally getting to thank him for giving me some serious "playground credibility" when I was a kid growing up in the late 1970s.

You see, during that time, Burt was THE biggest box office star in the world. Hits earlier in the decade like "Deliverance" and "The Longest Yard" paved the way for the huge action-comedy blockbuster "Smokey and the Bandit" and such subsequent money-makers as "Hooper" and "The Cannonball Run." He was a sex symbol of the highest order, with his chiseled features, legendary mustache, and manly chest hair. When a "Gone With the Wind" sequel looked to be in the works in the early '80s, he was BY FAR the choice to play Rhett Butler in a public poll at the time (Timothy Dalton would ultimately play the part in the 1994 mini-series). And who could forget the 1972 spread in Cosmopolitan, in which he appear nearly nude, that shot his star into stratosphere

(and prompted a mortified Fern to ban him from the family home for a time)

Burt, his personal life, and his career definitely had its share of stop-and-start moments. He married twice (to Judy Carne and Loni Anderson), and both did not end well. He dated Dinah Shore in the early to mid-1970s, who was 20 years his senior, before falling for "Smokey and the Bandit" co-star Sally Field hard, who never said "Yes" to any of his reported multiple proposals.

On the movie side, he turned down three huge, HUGE roles. The first was Han Solo in the original "Star Wars" (thank God, he did). The second was Jack Nicholson's Oscar-winning turn as the astronaut-next-door in "Terms of

Good Friends, Good Food

Dog owners dish on how food factors into pet bonding

FAMILY FEATURES

Ask most dog owners and they'll tell you that they count the bonds they share with their pets among their most treasured relationships. However, that boundless affection and loyalty isn't a one-sided effort; dog owners are demonstrating their puppy love in numerous ways, especially when it comes to chow time.

There's much to be said for the unique relationship people share with their dogs, according to the 2018 Pets and People Survey by Just Right by Purina. Nearly unanimously (95 percent), respondents said they view their dogs as part of their families, and more than half reported that their pet pals help them de-stress after a long workday and have comforted them after receiving bad news.

Just like any relationship, the bond with a dog requires nurturing. As it turns out, most dog owners are working to keep the love alive with a familiar approach: the notion that the fastest path to the heart is through the stomach. After all, when you view pets as family, you may as well feed them like it.

Encouraging dinner dialogue

A helpful aspect of pet bonding is developing communication patterns that your dog can recognize and understand. In part, this involves commands to help manage behavior, but it often includes other forms of engagement, as well.

Mealtime is an ideal opportunity to enjoy some extra interaction, from asking if your dog is hungry to talking your way through filling his or her bowl with a personalized dog food blend. In fact, 64 percent of dog owners surveyed reported asking their dog if it likes its food after serving it. There may not be a verbal response, but dogs give off plenty of signals to let you know whether or not they're enjoying the meal.

Personalizing the experience

Humans agree that eating or drinking out of a favorite vessel just makes mealtime more special. That may be the motivation for the 65 percent of dog owners who reported taking time to personalize their dogs' bowls.

Making dog nutrition matter

The majority of dog owners surveyed agreed the type of food their dog eats has an impact on its health and mood. For 43 percent of Millennial dog owners surveyed, they reported spending more money on their dog's food than their own groceries. Fortunately, not all nutritionally sound options will break the bank, but it is a good idea to do some research to understand the nutritional value and quality of the food you provide.

Serving up security

Dogs thrive on rituals and dinnertime is an opportunity to create some consistent patterns that help your pup feel safe and secure. A routine with meals in the same place at approximately the same time every day helps strengthen the pet bond because your dog knows he can rely on you to satisfy one of his most basic needs.

If you extend some human courtesies as part of your feeding ritual, you certainly aren't alone. For example, 73 percent of dog owners in the Just Right by Purina survey feed their dogs before they serve themselves. Not only is it a smart strategy to prevent begging at the table, it keeps your pooch from wondering when his own hunger cravings will be sated.

Celebrating special occasions

If your dog is part of the family, it only makes sense to celebrate special events like birthdays. It's a good excuse for a little extra attention and maybe a new toy or two. Forty percent of dog owners, including 56 percent of Millennials, have upped their pet parenting game by buying their dog its own birthday cake. Make your own using a pet-friendly recipe or visit a pet bakery for a special birthday treat.

Learn more about feeding the bond with your pet at justrightpetfood.com.

All statistics and findings included in this release were pulled from a survey conducted online by Research Now SSI on behalf of Just Right by Purina among adults ages 18+ who are dog owners and have some responsibility over the well-being of their pet. A total of 1,010 responses were collected between March 26 and March 29, 2018. These online surveys are not based on a probability sample and therefore no estimate of theoretical sampling error can be calculated.

DOG FOOD INGREDIENTS FOR UNIQUE NUTRITIONAL NEEDS

Your dog is unique, not only in his relationship with you, but his preferences, tastes, quirks and habits. It's no wonder that his nutritional needs are unique to match. When you're evaluating food options, give careful attention to the ingredients to find the right blend of nutrients for your dog:

- Vitamins are responsible for a vast range of functions, including aiding in DNA synthesis, energy release from nutrients, bone development, eye function, maintenance of cell structure, blood clotting, nerve signal transmission and everything in-between.
- Minerals contribute to your dog's healthy bones and teeth, blood clotting, muscle function, nerve transmission, nutrient metabolism, cell function and more.
- Fat is a source of energy that helps with absorption of fat-soluble vitamins and fatty acids, as well as promoting healthy skin and coat, immune system, joints, brain and vision.
- Protein is essential for building organs and tissues like tendons, muscles, skin, hair and blood; it also functions as enzymes, hormones and antibodies.
- Carbohydrates are efficient sources of glucose for energy, a source of heat and can be stored as glycogen. Fiber is a type of carbohydrate that aids in colon health, as well as managing weight and obesity.

Reynolds _____

Endearment” (which Burt would admit repeatedly in the years to come) was his biggest career regret). And the third was John McClane in the original “Die Hard” (although, to be fair, at least a dozen A-list actors turned the part down before the producers went to Bruce Willis). He also turned down “Boogie Nights” a reported seven times before agreeing to play pornography director Jack Horner, which garnered him his only Oscar nomination despite clashing with the director and firing his agent over what he thought was going to be a humiliating disaster.

Burt also starred in his share of stinkers. But he always came back. After a string of especially terrible films in the 1980s, he nabbed one of his best roles as the lead on “Evening Shade.” The CBS sitcom was a ratings hit and a critical favorite, and Burt won an Emmy.

Sure, I wanted to meet him in person. In the early 2000s when I was doing New York and L.A. press junkets every month for various entertainment publications, I had hoped to snag an interview with him. But his films during that time were ... eh ... spotty at best. I’d like to think I wouldn’t have been some brown-nosing relative, that we would have hit it off, and maybe kept in touch over the phone from time to time. And, of course, I would have hoped he left me the Trans Am in the will. But it’s truly been an honor to be of the same blood as Burt Reynolds and to be in his distant orbit for all these years.
