'Crazy, Rich Asians' Welcomes New Faces to the American Rom-Com

By Teddy Durgin

Special to The Examiner

There's been a lot of talk recently that once Daniel Craig vacates the role of James Bond after the next 007 movie in November 2019, the producers and studio will go with their first non-white actor in the role. Idris Elba has been floated as the most likely choice given that he's British, has the physicality to play the part, and is quite charming on and off screen.

After seeing "Crazy Rich Asians," I have another name to throw in the hat. Henry Golding! Golding, who is of British-Malaysian descent, makes his film debut in this romantic comedy based on the best-selling novel. But he has been known for several years in Europe and Asia as a model and the host of BBC's "The Travel Show" and Discovery Channel Asia's "Surviving Borneo." Elba, currently 45, is the right age for a traditional casting of Bond. But if the Powers That Be are going to go non-traditional, why not consider the younger, 31-year-old Golding who is suave, masculine, and delivers the goods here in one of the most impressive debut performances I've seen in some time.

I do think "Crazy Rich Asians" is being a touch over-praised by some reviewers. It's the first majority-Asian movie made by an American studio in 25 years. But it's a bit too long for my tastes, and I didn't care for the fact that the lead female character, Rachel Chu (Constance Wu of TV's "Fresh Off the Boat"), spends much of the movie reeling from lies and half-truths fed to her by both her boyfriend (Golding's Nick Young) and her mother (Tan Keung Hua). Meanwhile, everyone in her orbit is either a kind-hearted bunny rabbit of a supporter or a dark-hearted snake out to sabotage her and Nick.

The film is broadly played, for the most part, and flirts with being campy. But director Jon M. Chu wisely pulls back in the third act and allows the characters to emerge as more three-dimension-

Keep Up with Your Cat's Health

FAMILY FEATURES

Despite the fact that cats are more prevalent as pets than dogs, only about one cat per every five dogs receives regular veterinary care. In fact, some research suggests that as many as 50 percent of cat owners don't take their cats to the vet.

There are a number of factors that contribute to limited veterinary visits for cats. According to a survey by Royal Canin, two-thirds of cat owners simply believe cats have fewer health issues than dogs. However, according to the American Association of Feline Practitioners (AAFP), routine check-ups are vital for giving cats long, happy and healthy lives.

Cats age more rapidly than humans, and they are quite adept at hiding sickness and pain, making it difficult to know if there is something wrong that requires veterinary attention. Hidden diseases commonly go untreated for this reason, which is why the Take Your Cat to the Vet initiative was created to spread awareness about the importance of preventative feline veterinary care.

For example, up to one-third of cats over the age of 12 have some form of kidney disease. Managing the progression of the disease, if caught early, can be accomplished with a proper diagnosis and reduced-phosphorous diet. Your veterinarian may recommend an option like one of the Royal Canin Veterinary Diet® Renal Support formulas as part of a treatment program.

Obesity is also a common problem for cats that can lead to more severe health issues down the road. In fact, multiple studies indicate that more than half of the nation's domestic cats are carrying more weight than they should. A veterinarian can help with dietary recommendations and other suggestions to help trim your cat's waistline, along with screening for the onset of secondary complications.

Another common cat ailment is urinary stones, which can be extremely painful and cannot normally be detected without professional evaluation. Regular visits to the vet can help assess your cat's risk for developing stones and determine nutritional changes that may help prevent a problem.

Vet visits are also an opportunity to let your veterinarian know about any behavior changes and implement preventive care measures, which can be more effective than reactive care once a problem is revealed.

However, the very act of getting to the vet can be traumatic for cat owners and cats alike. Repetition is likely to help alleviate those concerns as your cat becomes more accustomed to the process, helping to put you at ease as well. In honor of the Take Your Cat to the Vet initiative, consider these tips and tricks from the experts at Royal Canin and the AAFP to make your cat's visits to the veterinarian easier:

1. Get your cat familiar with a carrier. Getting your cat into the carrier is often the most difficult part of getting him or her to the vet. Start by leaving the carrier out at all times and make it a safe place by placing food or a cozy towel inside. Using a secure, stable, hard-sided carrier that opens from the top and the front that can also be taken apart in the middle is best. When traveling, it's also a good idea to place your cat in the carrier rear-first, cover the carrier with a blanket and avoid bumping into things while carrying it.

2. Make the vet visit a positive experience. It's easy to imagine that vet visits can seem scary to a cat. Feeding your cat veterinary-approved treats from carrier to clinic can help create a positive connection with the trip and distract your pet from the busy waiting room or examination.

3. Take advantage of slow times at the clinic. The waiting room of an animal hospital can be loud and full of unfamiliar animals and smells, making it a chaotic and overwhelming environment. Ask if certain days or times are slower than others. Scheduling appointments at those times may help your cat feel less overwhelmed by a new environment.

4. Give your cat practice exams. In the examination room, your vet will give your cat a full examination. To make your cat comfortable with being touched in such a manner, consider giving him or her practice examinations at home and positively reward your pet for letting you look at and touch his or her stomach, feet, face and ears.

5. Talk to your vet. Your veterinarian is your best partner to help your cat feel comfortable inside and outside the clinic. Discuss with him or her other ideas to help make visits less stressful.

Crazy Rich Asians

al thinking, feeling people. It also allows the Rachel character to go from being reactive to proactive, and Wu hits some really effective notes.

Until then, the film gets by on its beautiful cast, terrific locations, and gaudy excesses. These are, for sure, some kooky and incredibly loaded Asians. Even those who aren't in Nick's wealthy family have wealth beyond any dream of avarice I've ever had. There are also some big laughs, too, most of which are provided by Awkwafina as Goh, Rachel's brassy buddy who seems to have a dress for every occasion ready to go in the trunk of her car.

The film centers on Rachel, an NYU professor, being asked to accompany her boyfriend, Nick, to Singapore where he will be the best man at his best friend's wedding. This will also be the first time Rachel meets Nick's family, which she senses will move their relationship to a whole new level. What she doesn't count on is Nick coming from the wealthiest family in Asia and him being the most eligible bachelor in Singapore. His return home is an event (the fact that she didn't Google him once in the months they've been dating or been witness to one moment where he was recognized in Manhattan is just something you have to ignore for the enjoyment of the film).

Once in Singapore, Rachel tangles with Nick's domineering mother (Michelle Yeoh), his formidable grandmother (Lisa Lu), his scheming former girlfriend (Jing Lusi), and more. She also attends a lavish bachelorette party, is victim to a cruel prank, and gets the stink eye from any and all who believe Nick to be nothing short of royalty.

It's Cinderella and the Prince with different wrapping. The formula, though, still works. And Golding -- who gets ample screen time to be strong and sensitive and frequently shirtless -- gets launched into the stratosphere. A decade ago, I might be talking him up as the next great Bond villain. In a few years time, he may indeed be the next great Bond.

"Crazy Rich Asians" is rated PG-13 for some suggestive content and language.
