Movie Review Incredibles 2 Is Incredibly Fun

By Teddy Durgin
Special to the Examiner

The best superhero movies have one thing in common. They are just as good and watchable when their lead hero or heroes are NOT in their costumes performing feats of strength, speed, daring, and courage. Think about it. I would contend that the best moments in any of the three "Iron Man" movies are when Robert Downey Jr. is OUT of the armor and just being Tony Stark in all of his sardonic, egotistical glory. The original "Superman" movies were at their best when Christopher Reeve was playing the charming, bumbling Clark Kent, duping his Daily Planet co-workers and charming Lois Lane.

So, it is with the "Incredibles" movies. The Parr family -- otherwise known as Mr. Incredible, Elastigirl, and their three kids Violet, Dash, and Baby Jack-Jack -- are as compelling and maybe even more so when they're just at home, sitting around a dinner table, and relating to each other as when they are out on the town in full costume battling some megalomaniacal threat to all of humanity.

"Incredibles 2" is the insanely good new sequel now in theaters that maintains all of the charm and whimsy of the first film and also tells a truly involving new story about a family in upheaval with the mom and dad switching traditional gender roles, the teenage daughter feeling all hormonal, and the baby throwing temper tantrums that include screaming, crying ... and, oh yeah, shooting laser beams from his eyes and teleporting back and forth to different dimensions.

This is the most pure fun I've had watching a flick since "Thor: Ragnarok." It's loose, confident, quite funny spots. Oh, and it just happens to be a fantastic action movie to boot! There are a good half-dozen fight scenes in this flick that are as good as any in the live-action "Avengers" movies (especially a hilarious bout between Jack-Jack and a raccoon ... trust me). And the major setpieces, which include Elastigirl having to stop an out-of-control train and all of the "Supers" banding together to try and avert a billionaire's massive yacht from crashing into a city port, are so well-conceived, animated, and edited, they're just things o' beauty, I tell ya!

Most of the vocal cast returns from the first "Incredibles" 14 years ago. Craig T. Nelson is once again all wounded bluster as Mr. Incredible/Bob Parr, forced to take on more of the parenting duties to his three kids when his wife, Elastigirl/Helen Parr (Holly Hunter), becomes a sudden media celebrity and proponent for getting the Supers' citizenship rights restored. Frozone/Lucius (Samuel L. Jackson) is back to lend moral support, wise cracks, and help taking on a new menace known as Screenslaver, who has the ability to take over view screens all over the globe with strobe light patterns that turn otherwise good people into zombie pawns hellbent on disrupting society and the status quo.

I like that Pixar doesn't go too heavy-handed with some of the messages here, keeping the Parr family at the core of the story. The villain, though, ends up having a valid, even somewhat noble point of view that's as logical as Erik Killmonger's was in "Black Panther." But, like Killmonger, Screenslaver's end game is still quite evil and must ultimately be stopped.

Meanwhile, as the plot unfolds and the action gets bigger and bigger, the viewer's eyes drink in some of the most stylized animation, set, and character designs of any film in recent memory. Writer-director Brad Bird and his legion of Pixar animators maintain that whole 1960s-inspired, retro-futuristic look and style of the first "Incredibles." Will it be another incredibly long 14 years before we see these characters and this world again? Sigh. Parr for the course with the geniuses at Pixar.

"Incredibles 2" is rated PG for action sequences and some brief mild language (one character says, "Well, I'll be damned.")
