MOVIE REVIEW

Hotel Transylvania 3: The Third Time Is Thankfully NOT the Harm

By Teddy Durgin

Special to the Examiner

For years in Hollywood, there have been several "Rat Pack" wannabe cliques of actors/friends who have managed to hoodwink the studio system and all make movies together. Many of these flicks succeed not because they're legitimately good movies, but because their target audiences are made to feel like they are vicariously a part of their friends' circle. This is true of the ol' "Freaks and Geeks" crew consisting in various combinations of Seth Rogen, James Franco, Jason Segal, and invited hangers-on like Craig Robinson, Jonah Hill, and Danny McBride. And it's certainly been true for Adam Sandler and his merry band of pals, bros, and buddies like Kevin James, Rob Schneider, David Spade, and others.

But as the years progress and, let's face it, it gets harder to look at some of these folks, there has been the predictable turn to animation to keep the gravy train rolling. It's a shrewd move. The real creative talents like Rogen ("Sausage Party") and Sandler (the "Hotel Transylvania" flicks) who have actual screenplay and producer experience put the projects together. Their buddies come in for a day or two of voiceover work in a studio sound booth and pick up a hefty paycheck.

I WANT TO BE THEIR FRIENDS!!!

Ahem.

At any rate, the latest buddy collaborative "Hotel Transylvania 3: Summer Vacation" hits theaters this weekend. And as cash grabs go, it's a mostly pleasant and harmless family comedy. Sandler and Co. even jump on the whole "Social Justice Warrior" bandwagon and craft a #MeToo story this time out that's about love and accepting each other's differences and moving forward together. Not sure if this were real life and we really, truly had vampires, monsters, creatures, and ghouls roaming the planet amongst us that we'd really feel this way. I mean, rampant bloodsuckers, werewolves, and zombies that have to feed are probably just the thing to bridge the red-blue, right-left divide in the good ol' U S of A and get some real bipartisan legislation moving.

But I digress.

This time out, Sandler's Dracula and his creature cohorts decide to take a vacation from their hotel business and go on a Bermuda Triangle cruise. This gives them an opportunity to play some monster volleyball, get moon tans, etc. Complications ensue when Drac

Hotel Transylvania 3

is smitten with Ericka (Kathryn Hahn), the ship’s mysterious captain (hint ... her last name turns out to be Van Helsing), who secretly hates all of monsterkind and is plotting their destruction.

Animation franchises are funny things. When the first film is released and becomes a hit, the kids who are of age at that time flock to see it. But that first “Hotel Transylvania” was six years ago. My daughter, for instance, was 7 at the time and she loved it. Today, at 13, I tried to get her to go see this third in the series and she had NO interest. She wouldn’t even wear a disguise with me so as to avoid facial recognition if any of her middle-school friends were at the theater checking out “Ant-Man and the Wasp.” God help me, I had more interest than my once-little Maddie for seeing this.

One big reason is the character stylings of director Genndy Tartakovsky, who gained fame in animation circles early in his career with the “Samurai Jack” series and the early “Star Wars: The Clone Wars” shorts. He and his team have a lot of fun here with their creature designs that are kind of a cross between cereal-box creations and classic creature feature characters. My favorite sequence takes place early in the film when Drac and friends board Gremlin Air and EVERY crew member onboard looks like the creepy crawler on the wing from that classic episode of “The Twilight Zone.”

In a sequel-happy summer, “Hotel Transylvania 3” stays true to its concept and specific charms that preceded it. Those charms are modest and the messages are certainly worthy of Sandler, Spade, and the others patting themselves on their collective backs at their next backyard mansion barbecue. It’s a feel-good film ... with the cast and crew feeling the best afterwards.

“Hotel Transylvania 3: Summer Vacation” is rated PG for some action and rude humor.
