W.Va. State Treasurer receives State Attorney General's legal opinion on medical cannabis banking

CHARLESTON – West Virginia State Treasurer John Perdue has received Attorney General Patrick Morrisey's opinion regarding medical cannabis banking options in West Virginia. The 10-page document is a complex opinion that weighs the legal risks of medical cannabis banking. Treasurer Perdue takes his role regarding this issue seriously and recognizes the need for a lawful solution.

An initial review of the opinion appears to allow the State Legislature to move forward with legislation that will address medical cannabis banking issues in West Virginia; at the same time, it states, "any permanent fix must come from the federal government."

Treasurer Perdue and his legal team will take time to analyze the full impact of Attorney General Morrisey's opinion.
