They are doing phenomenally well at the box office and typically received unanimous critical acclaim. Many Pixar films have even been nominated for an Oscar. It doesn't matter how old you are. Pixar is for everyone. Parents can use their children as an excuse to go and watch the last Pixar animation in theaters, but that doesn't mean they don't secretly (or openly) enjoy the movies themselves. Here's a list of hilarious Pixar logic memes from the internet. There are certain things that only Pixar does, and people on the internet have figured out their patterns and poked a little fun in the animation studio. 10 Pixar ilmology Despite all of Pixar's incredibly creative and original ideas for their stories, they have one thing in common. If you look at all the posters and promotional images in their movies, the protagonists make a similar look. The meme described here is one of the original Pixar logic memes. It's funny to think how animoners who are so adept at creating shiny worlds full of lively colors can't come up with a different poster expression for their characters. On the other hand, maybe it's done intentionally as a trademark or helps create a sense of continuity between all their movies. 9 Frozen takes over the Coco screenings If you watched the Pixar movie Coco in theaters during its first week of release, you may have been treated to a special frozen clip. The problem with the Frozen clip is that it lasted a whole 20 minutes in addition to regular previews. This means that when you were going to see Coco, you were forced to sit for 40 minutes of content before your movie even started. Customers left the theatre to complain to theatre staff about the wrong movie. It became such a problem that Disney eventually decided to remove the Frozen clip. But you have to wonder what the higher level thought adding it was a good idea. 8 Balding Fish father No one can say that Pixar does not pay extreme attention to detail in every film in his film. In finding Dory, the highly anticipated follow-up film of the beloved Finding Nemo, we see an example of this in the description of Dory's father. He's got a receding hairline over a fish! Of course, it doesn't consist of hair. As this Twitter user points out, it's pretty funny and witty that the animation team thought about using their natural coloring to represent a typical dad's hairline or balding pattern. Critics praised the discovery of Dory. 7 Everything has its feelings! Everything in Pixar's world has feelings! Most of their films are about some kind of lifeless object or being suddenly sentient. Almost every story involves unusual animate. Whether it's toys, cars, monsters, rats or fish, does not draw the line at any particular thing or exists. If they come up with an exciting story to tell, nothing is forbidden. It includes the emotions themselves. In Inside Out, even emotions and emotions have feelings. If that's not a paradoxical statement, I don't know what it is. Inside Out was hugely praised, so the animation studio clearly knows what they're doing. 6 Death with animation In each Pixar movie you will find the introductory animation of the Pixar logo. A mini-lamp that jumps and jumps on the screen has become famous for its short but memorable appearance. As this Tumblr user points out, it is somewhat threatening if you think about it. The lamp lights up and crushes the letter I before turning in front of the audience as if to say you're next. It's uncertain if Pixar's purpose was when they designed the logo, but who knows? Maybe it was meant to be a subtle threat to all the other animation studios. Keep watch, DreamWorks. 5 Me as a parent One of the best things about pixar movies is that they usually contain humor for adults. Of course, you won't find any rough, R-rated comedy here, of course this isn't sausage party, but you'll find some clever jokes. Most of the time, these jokes go straight over the heads of kids watching a movie. It's fun to watch your favorite Pixar movies as an adult and notice the little things you might have missed when you were younger. This meme is a great and fun example of one. It is also highly relatable. When you need a break from your kids, why not sit in your car and listen to heavy metal? Even monster mothers do it! 4 Never gives you... The meme above may take you a second to get, but when it clicks, it's funny. We all know the infamous Rick Astley song Never going to Give You Up, most of us have fallen prey to Rickroll at least once in our lives. What's the name of a pixar movie that involves an old man, a house and tons of balloons? Exactly. The song's title, Never Going to Give You Up, gets a whole new meaning when viewed in pixar's context. Rick Astley may be willing to share all his other Pixar movies, but he's keeping a close eye on this movie. 3 Villain's hair It's starting to feel like all pixar's opponents are going for the same haircut. All four hairlines in this photo are easily recognizable for an avid Pixar fan. Each belongs to a critical villain or contestant in a Pixar movie. They tend to get in the way of the protagonist's goals or try to steal from them. Maybe their bitterness is because their hairlines are receding. Does that mean it could be secretly evil to find Father Dory? It's not likely, but like the meme above, it's pretty fun to think and prop with the person who recognized this hairstyle trend. 2 Before and after Seeing Ratatouille Maybe the average person would be disturbed to see a rat in the kitchen, but if you've seen Ratatouille, you'll know better. The whole premise of the film is the rat, which is secretly a fantastic cook. A rat named Remy hides under a one-man cook hat because the man in question is not a good cook. However, by working together, Remy helps make him a hugely successful and well-known chef. This tweet is funny if you think about it in that context. Obviously, in real life, you wouldn't approach the rat you find in the kitchen, but on the other hand, if you need cooking tips, maybe you will. 1 Hanging out with children This may be the most relatable meme of the whole crowd. Sure, Pixar movies are typically aimed at the younger population, but they are also designed for people of all ages. Most people love Pixar movies. They are heartwarming, fun, and usually contain something for people, regardless of the year you were born. If you go to a Pixar movie in theaters, you might be surprised how many adults are there without children, especially if you count yourself among them! Still, it's funny to think about it like you're the only adult sitting in the middle of a group of kids.
