Canadian citizenship application form

Picture: ChristopherBernard/E+/Getty Images To get Canadian citizenship, you need to know all about Canada to pass the test. But according to a survey by forum Research, at least 9 out of every 10 Canadians will fail the test. While this may be true, now is a good time to test yourself on how much you know about your country. While you may not know some areas, you definitely know a thing or two in other areas. Canadian history is one subject that may prove difficult, but perhaps you know a little more about society in Canada. Even if you find the question to be difficult, it will show you where your weak point is in your Canadian knowledge. Being Canadian is about knowing the symbols, languages, and people that matter in our country. It is equally important to know your rights and freedoms as a Canadian citizen. While you may already be recognized as a citizen, now is your chance to test your knowledge of our great country. If you can ace this quiz, then you probably know it inside and out. Voting © 2021 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC. System1 Company You will probably find the process of applying for U.S. citizenship (naturalization) to be much more complicated than getting you The card. This involves filing only one government form and very little accompanying material, and attending an interview at the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) office near you. In the interview, you will be tested your knowledge of English as well as U.S. history and government. As with any application to USCIS, you should take care to make sure you are qualified, fill out the form correctly, and prepare fully for interviews and exams. For eligibility rules, see Who Can Apply for U.S. Citizenship. Any piece of missing or incorrect information on your app or during your interview for citizenship can easily lead to denial - even if you don't realize you made a mistake or didn't try to lie, and even if the mistake isn't about anything you think is important. Also recognize that there is a risk to apply for naturalization. If information emerges that casts doubt on your eligibility for a green card, you can not only be denied citizenship but lose your lawful permanent U.S. residence. IMPORTANT WARNING: All timeliness in this article, and interviews and in-person appointments, have been placed in limbo by the coronavirus or COVID-19 epidemic. Although uscis offices will receive applications by mail for processing, the agency does not schedule biometric appointments, citizenship interviews, or swearing-in ceremonies as of March 2020. Submitting a Naturalization Application The most important part of your citizenship application is Form N-400, Application for Naturalization, available for free download on the USCIS website. Along with the N-400 form, you must set up and submit: Fee payment (see the Form N-400 page of the USCIS website for the most recent amount. By the end of 2020, the total will be $725, including $640 for basic fees and $85 for biometrics (but likely to be raised soon). You can pay by check, money order, or by filling out and submitting the USCIS G-1450 Form, Credit Card Transaction Authorization. There are important exceptions with respect to the amount; USCIS offers a $320 fee reduction plus $85 for biometrics for applicants whose family income level is between 150% and 200% of the Federal Poverty Guidelines, and who apply for this by filling out and submitting Form I-942, a Cost Reduction Request, along with an N-400 application. It is also possible to apply for a complete waiver of fees, using FORM I-912 USCIS. Photocopy of your green card (both sides). The cover letter (optional, but a good idea), explains what is included and records specific requests, such as for expense waivers or disability accommodation. If you live abroad, two photos U.S. passport style, with your name and A number written on the back of each, in a perceived pencil or pen. (Applicants in the U.S. will have photos taken at appointment.) Proof of your current marital status, such as marriage, annulment, or death certificate. (Single applicants don't have to worry about these requirements.) Other documents specific to your situation; for example, form N-648 if you apply for a disability-based naturalization requirement waiver, or proof that you are eligible to apply after three (not five) years based on your marriage and residence with a U.S. citizen. Make a full copy before submitting your application to USCIS, following the instructions on its website. Attending Your Biometric Appointment and Waiting for Your Interview After receiving your application, USCIS will send you a notification telling you when and where to go to provide biometrics (fingerprints). This will be the USCIS or ASC application support center closest to the address you provide to your application. If you need to change the date of your biometric appointment, the notification will tell you what to do. A few months later, you'll be told when to show up for a private interview at your local USCIS office. During that interview, a USCIS officer will review your application and approve or deny your citizenship. Preparing for your Naturalization Interview, you must indicate that you can speak and read in English. If you're not yet comfortable with this, taking classes at your local adult school can help. To focus on primary vocabulary, see the study materials for the English Test page of the USCIS website. You also need to study the list of questions in preparation for the test of U.S. history and government. Unless you qualify for waivers (based on age or disability), you must answer 60% of these correctly to pass the exam. See the Study Materials for Citizenship Test page on the USCIS website to find these questions and the different ways to learn them. What Happens in a Naturalization Interview In your interview, a USCIS officer will review your application and ask a variety of questions from Form N-400. It serves a dual purpose: to confirm your eligibility and to test your knowledge of spoken English. The officer will also ask you to write sentences in English, and ask questions from the list you are studying. How many questions you will ask, and how many you need to answer correctly, will be changed by the end of 2020. People applying before December 1, 2020 need to answer six out of ten questions correctly, thus passing the 2008 version of the citizenship test. People who register after December 1, 2020 need to answer 12 out of 20 questions correctly. If approved by USCIS, you must scheduled for the swearing-in ceremony. You are not a citizen until you are sworn in. If you are rejected due to failure to pass the English or citizenship test, you will be automatically rescheduled for another interview, which will take place in 90 days. If you don't for some other reason, you may be given time to resolve the issue. It would be a good time to get a lawyer's help. For detailed information about the citizenship application process, see Becoming a U.S. Citizen: Legal Guide, Exams & Interview, by Ilona Bray (Nolo). John Elk III/Lonely Planet Images/Getty Images Canadian shields are formed by a combination of tectonic plates, volcanic eruptions, sediment deposits and erosion. It is the first part of North America to permanently be above sea level, and the rest of the North American continent is formed around it. Canada Shield's oldest rock was formed two billion years ago. Fossils of bacteria and algae, among the oldest on Earth, are also formed today. Formerly composed of mountainous terrain, canada's shield was flattened by billions of years of erosion and glacial attacks. The only vestige from the early mountains that survived into the modern era was the Adirondack range in northern New York. None of Canada's Shield volcanoes remain active into the modern era; they are inactive and eventually eroded to flat plains by glacial activity. Parts of Canada's Shield were submerged in later sea level changes, including Hudson Bay and the sea between Canada and Greenland. The former Canadian Shield region also survives underground, with its furthest levels to the southeast under the Appalachian Mountains and the outermost levels of its west under the Rocky Mountains. The mountains were formed through later geological processes and were not part of the original Canadian Shield, unlike the previous Adirondack Mountains. Mountains.
