As the old internet proverb goes, use the 10 seconds that the live quiz app HQ Trivia wisely provides. And if you decide you want to spend one of the 10 seconds scouring search engines for answers? Maybe consider some helpful tips for what to Google during Trivia HQ. They may not guarantee victory, but they can guide you in the right direction. If you've switched to Google during Trivia-ing HQ, you're not the only one. Around 3:00 p.m. ET and 9 p.m. ET (a.k.a. HQ Trivia at hour one and hour HQ Trivia part two), many people ask for the help of search engines. For example, New York Magazine noted that a group of people googled Herculaneum around 3 p.m ET on Monday. Why? Oh, maybe it has something to do with the Trivia HQ question about the city of Herculaneum. Just a hunch. Dan Dan any questions about the hottest planet in the solar system during the same game? You better trust people reaching out to Google. As Inverse points out, there is suddenly a surge in searches for the hottest planets just when Trivia HQ asks questions about - you guessed it - the hottest planets. And so on and so on. Now, maybe you're too noble of a player to look for answers. Maybe you believe it's cheating to utilize search engines in the middle of a round. Maybe you won't dare google while playing HQ Trivia. And hey, it's okay. However, if you're down to making Google part of your Trivia HQ gameplay, these suggestions can help you. If you plan to googling trivia HQ questions, don't waste any of your 10 seconds typing the whole question. Instead, zero on the meat and potatoes question. As Mashable Alex Hazlett suggests, Phrasing is key. Many HQ questions are put in a way that makes this difficult for search engines to answer. We found that the trick is not to try to ask the right questions, but rather to focus on keywords and trust Google's powerful search algorithm to display the necessary info. When the November 20, 2017 game asked, Which baseball bat holds the record for most total bases in a 9-inning game?, it would take too long to connect the entire question to Google. Typing a total base of 9 records, on the other hand, is a much faster way to reach the goal: The fourth search result is Shawn Green's Wikipedia page, and what you know, Shawn Green's name is the correct answer. Of course, searching for keywords on Google won't always be fast enough, but it can work. And if you really want to pump out the search? Hazlett recommends using the Google Assistant. He explained, The fastest way to do this is to use Google voice search on Android phones. We tried another way - typing into Google or even some complex player grouping system - but nothing quite worked. When you call the Google Assistant, remember: time is of the moment. Cut to catch up and make sure your questions go straight to the keywords. Oh, and be sure to skip the greetings. Hazlett continued, Don't bother starting with 'OK, Google.' You'll lose precious time you can't afford. But if you press the microphone icon and create a very strategic query, you should be able to get a fairly reliable Google result with 2 to 3 seconds to backup - just enough time to process it and tap the right option. It wouldn't feel like a real trivia night if at least one competitor didn't try to not-so-smooth google behind a plate of nachos. Can't wait for the inevitable update of Trivia HQ that includes a host of trivia bars that step on your desk and kick you out of the game when they catch you scrolling through the Wiki page on your phone. Bad news for quiz lovers everywhere: HQ Trivia, a live mobile trivia game, shuts down and lays off the remaining 25 full-time employees, according to CNN. On Friday, users scrambled to claim the remaining prize money - and faced an error message as they tried to cash in. The app launched in 2017 and gained a massive following the following year by calling users twice a day for a 15-minute video segment and a chance to win cash prizes by answering questions correctly. Paired with eccentric comedy host Scott Rogowsky, the addictive trivia game easily topped the App Store charts. However, the company's internal problems made headlines just one year after its launch. Delayed payment complaints, plus an explosive CEO shuffle, made millions of its hard users quickly drop. Kroll died of an overdose in December 2018.) One of HQ Trivia's more famous public relations nightmares comes after controversial businessman Peter Thiel was revealed as a financial backer. In company-throughout emails, obtained by CNN, Yusupov said major investors are no longer willing to fund the company, and so effective today, HQ will cease operations and move to dissolution. HQ CEO Rus Yusupov has just sent a note to staff (25 full-time employees): This is one of the hardest things to do in my life, and I&#39;truly sorry for any disruption this may cause you and our players.&quot; pic.twitter.com/MOWfs43m1 &amp;mdash; Kerry Flynn ???? (@kerrymflynn) February 14, 2020 In early 2019, HQ Trivia announced it received $10 million in advertising revenue. Sponsorship with General Motors, Nike, and Warner Bros. Following. But then that same year, in July, it laid off 20% of its staff, leading other employees to quit as well. Reports of low morale and cash shortages led HQ Trivia to shift its business model to include more in-app purchases. As users became increasingly disinterested in the game, revenue began to decline, and executives began looking to develop other gaming apps, such as HQX, to keep viewers' attention. In the end, all efforts failed despite Yusupov's incentive to find additional investors and partners to support the company's expansion, according to CNN. Upon learning of the news, some social media users wondered if they could still get paid for past victories. Some try to cash out their earnings using the app and experience error messages. Hey@hqtrivia sorry you guys are closed now Does this mean I can't cash in on my last victory?? Just tried for the last few minutes and was unlucky. Bum to see that mighty Duck knowledge and @hqwords prowess will be lost to the ether without my cash I pic.twitter.com/pBFDyRVEys &amp;mdash; Jen Smith (@supercommonname) February 15, 2020 Just ended?? What about the prize money we accumulated? &amp;mdash; Melissa Barngrover (@MelissaB425) February 14, 2020 When Jean Henegan tried to cash in Friday afternoon, she was confronted with a message of error. I stuck with $13.85 [and] I couldn't cash out, Henegan told Digital Trends. I got notice over the last two days about cashing in, but assumed it would be fine. Henegan added he had never received any notice of cashing in before. HQ Trivia did not immediately return a request for comment from Digital Trends about whether players would still give the cash prizes they accumulated in the game. At its peak, HQ Trivia had 15 million installations of all time. Last month, it had only 67,000, according to a spokesman from Sensor Tower. At least it will be remembered as a great way to make it 3p.m. on weekdays. Editor's Recommendations Lovers Lindsey Murray Trivia knows no better satisfaction than destroying the competition with their assortment of random knowledge. We got it, and we're here to introduce you to a new app that will let you get your fix every day, twice a day: HQ Trivia. You've probably heard your kids talk about it, or maybe, you've seen a viral video of a woman's hilarious reaction after winning $11.30 on the app. This content is imported from Twitter. You may be able to find the same content in other formats, or you may be able to find more information, on their website. Anyway, we think it's safe to say that HQ Trivia is an internet phenomenon that you'll want to get in. Here's everything you need to know before you get started. How does HQ Trivia work? To play, you need to download the HQ Trivia app to your iPhone and Android. The game airs twice a day - 3 p.m. and 9 p.m. EST - and challenges players to correctly answer 12 multiple-choice questions. Some laugh easily (What do cows say?). Others, not so much. You only have 10 seconds to choose the right answer. If you answer incorrectly, you are disqualified. Lindsey Murray The players who are able to answer all 12 questions correctly win and split the cash prize, ranging from $1,000 to $15,000. The amount received by each winner depends on the number of players who made it through to the final round. So, sometimes winning is just a few cents, while other times it can be thousands of dollars. If you win, a pop up will appear on your screen congratulating you. Click continue and it will lead you to PayPal, where you claim your money. HQ Trivia has some talent taking on the role of host all week, but there is one that outperforms the rest: Scott Rogowsky, otherwise known as Quiz Daddy. The funny personality has become a cult favorite of HQ fanatics (which Scott calls his base), that social media broke out mourning as he took some time off during the holidays. Since then, Rogowsky has hosted almost every game. This content is imported from Twitter. You may be able to find the same content in other formats, or you may be able to find more information, on their website. Who can play? Anyone with an Android or iOS smartphone with a fast connection is willing to create a player profile in the app. Where does the HQ Trivia prize money come from? Since the game has no ads or sponsored questions, many fans wonder where the thousands of dollars worth of prize money comes from. The answer, according to Money: venture capital investors are hoping the game will eventually become so big, that the company will pay to be shown on it. Considering the creators are the same people who founded Vine, we wouldn't be surprised if the viral following behind the app continues to grow. Ready to play? Just download the app! If you know someone who is playing, ask him for a referral code and you will get an extra life.
