Now, once you got over the initial frustration that the the thess dictionary wasn't a cool new dinosaur, i thought it was pretty stylish, all synonymous with clans and super (and contrasting) you may ever need to be collected in a book! And today, because the internet is so great, you can even pull up an online thessing dictionary with a few keystrokees, making it even easier to find the perfect word for every situation. Your teacher probably thought that not all synonyms mean exactly the same thing. In other words, they're not interchangeable. A ballerina can be described as sensitive and elegant - perfectly acceptable descriptions. But if synonymously used weak, brittle or flimsy, a quick kick in a pointed shoe can wind up the unlucky buyer! So if you have a surfeit, a glutton, a deluge or a synonymous abundance of words, you will no doubt be able to ace this exam and boast all your friends, friends, cronies and comrades! Picture: Getty Images mkakade711@gmail.com english language over 200,000 words, which cover about 95% of a trivial 3,000 linguistic needs. This means that most of us are not using the magnificent gift that is Shakespeare's language, which is something like its full potential. Indeed, it is possible to limit yourself to even the 1,000 most used words and general speech; You can still get by. However, there will be a lack of specific things that makes the conversation beautiful, interesting, or compelling. What's the way to talk better? Envelopes, adjectives, phrases, and speech figures can help here and have synonyms with them. These are words that mean the same as other words, such as when synonyms appear together in dictionary entries. Examples can include anger, wrath, anger and anger. However, synonyms are not the same, even if they are very similar. We offer nuance tones. For example, happy, cheerful and cheerful don't exactly mean the same thing, but it's synonymous. Likewise teal, periwinkle and navy blue, but shades of blue. The purpose of synonyms is to offer a truly definitive understanding that illuminates what you're trying to say. The pilot fish is hired to create an intranet for this production business, and there is a critical requirement given to him when he takes the job: He cannot address it by name. I was told under no circumstances did he say intranet? Says. I was told to call it the I-Web. One of the family members who ran this place appeared to be a bit technologically illiterate. When the HEAD of IT suggested that we develop an intranet, he went ballistic, making it known that he would never let the internet out loud! All that, all that destruction, all those hackers! The boss tried to explain that the intranet wasn't the same as the Internet, but it made him even more nervous. A few months later, he approached her again with an exciting new technology idea called the i-web. This time he was 100% on the same boat as him -- because it wasn't the Internet. Copyright © 2016 IDG Communications, Inc. Long ago, Comstock, 46, was working in General Electric marketing. We should thank him for the eco-magination. He moved to GE's NBC Universal unit 18 months ago and received a new concert combining advertising sales and digital media at the TV network, cable channels and movie studio. Want to transfer Heroes, read the interactive novel and bid online for artwork from the show? And thank You Comstock for all this. Television's economy used to be simple. When I can watch 30 Rock all the time, do you understand how we can make money today? We understand it much better than we did before. Digital media allows you to open new windows without canning, which you can expect. So yes, we can offer preview 30 Rock, then stream, then stream, then iTunes, then mobile, and then syndication. We did the modeling. Looks like we're going to make more money. How do advertisers account for this new world? Some people know what they want, some less. But now, every marketer does it digitally, not because it's fashionable, but because they have to. Purchasing groups have created units called vision, sound, and motion [to work across the media]. They expect us to reach targeted consumers: What do we know about them and how do we get to them? How are viewing habits changing? Nbc.com broadcast 60 million TV shows. Most of them are repeat viewers. The others are changing time. They're relocating, too, with iTunes or on phones. And does that work for you? It has to be. If consumers are in control, they'll understand how they want to watch. We have to find the right solution. What's next? More personal expression [by viewers], the desire to be involved in storytelling. It's like watching SMS text or Heroes and dialing a phone number to vote on a reality show. This thing is so primitive; One day we're going to look back and say, We were so cute back then! All this means a major cultural shift. How did NBC Universal cope? This area is crazy and chaotic, and we're constantly trying to get out of our way. With success, make sure you're a little more confident. But we still need to be more focused and disciplined. Like you once said about yourself, are you still impatient? Yes. And I'm scared. I scan the view all the time. What's next? Who's going to get there first? This job is so delicate. We have to choose a path, follow it, and feel good. Second guess, it's more than an ulcer. Ulcer.
