It is important to check the rly time table frequently for any changes throughout the year. Trains can arrive at the station earlier than the scheduled arrival time according to the Indian train schedule, but according to strict rules they can not leave earlier than the scheduled departure time specified in the Indian train time table. Trains may or may not be stopped at the station in accordance with the scheduled stopping time specified in the level crossing time table. In other words, trains can depart from the station before the planned stop time according to the rail timetable - provided they do not leave the station before the scheduled departure time according to the rail journey time schedule. In many sections of a train stop, the train time table contains a significant time buffer as part of the train timetable time table. This allows the train to regain time if it operates in a delayed manner. For some trains, it is observed that the IRCTC time table differs from what is provided for in the main Indian railway time table. Travelers are suggested to double check. - FAQ Q) How can I check the Cheran Express train time table (12673) on RailYatri?
